Two Kinds of Giving.
More Worries in Europe.
3,000 Miles of Salt Water.
A Robot Sea Captain.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

OUR NATION is extremely generous. It is easy to give away money of the people raised by selling bonds. And giving causes a pleasant glow, when it costs nothing.

But our financiers are "hard boiled" when it comes to risking their own money or that of their institutions, in Germany or elsewhere.

What money they have failed to withdraw from Germany, in the recent days of uncertainty, will probably stay there, since the president requests it. But for some time to come Germany and Europe generally will find it difficult to borrow in this market.

GERMAN INDUSTRIAL conditions are bad. Berlin fears that another million men may be out of work. The French, whose memory goes back to 1870, and Bismarck's five thousand million francs, will continue drawing from Germany all that Germany can give.

THIS COUNTRY would like to help, if only to protect gigantic sums that Germany owes to private individuals and institutions here.

But it is difficult to suggest anything that the country can do. Curiously enough, when nations are cutting each other's throats, it is easy to send over ten billions of dollars to prolong and help in war.

But, apparently, it is impossible to send even one billion to help a nation, struggling industrially.

GERMANY'S FINANCIAL worries cause general European worries. France plans concessions and assistance to Germany such as will bring the nations on the continent closer together, with France at their head to offset what is called the "Anglo-United States bloc."

Great Britain does not like the idea of a continent united against her, with a great French submarine and airplane fleet aimed at Britain's shipping and big cities, and France, at this moment, draining England of her gold, $20,000,000 in a day, by airplane.

It is not what you might call a cheerful situation for any of the nations concerned.

THIS NATION may be grateful that 3,000 miles of salt water separate us from Europe's troubles. It is to be hoped that the United States will appreciate that separation, and not be led into dangerous complications, not even in the effort to get back the millions that American financiers, in spite of warnings, have foolishly invested in dubious foreign bonds.

THE THREE THOUSAND miles of salt water may not be so important in another year or two.

Capt. Hawks, champion flier, two days ago ate his breakfast in New York, his luncheon in Havana, his dinner in New York on the same night, traveling over 2,806 miles of salt water in 17 hours, 3 minutes.

With sufficient fuel he could have gone to Europe within 24 hours.

IF ONE FLIER, backed by a powerful oil company, can fly the ocean in a day, what will prevent a great nation from sending five thousand bombing and pursuit planes across the ocean in one day?

How long will it take to arrange that? And what would be left of our big cities after such a visit?

WOULD IT BE a good idea to stop worrying about Europe and begin worrying about the United States?

In London experiments a fleet of airplanes attacking the great British city from the coast and another fleet defending London, it was shown that London is practically defenseless. A comparatively small attack of one hundred planes, such as was arranged, could destroy the principal buildings in London and thousands upon thousands of the population.

There is something worth thinking about.

ONE GOOD FEATURE of the European, American and other troubles is this: You at least know what they are. We know that the squandering of money and blood in war, foolish extravagance and wastefulness that followed it are responsible for our present condition.

When you know what is the matter with you, a cure is not so difficult.

A colored person, on the scaffold, asked if he wished to say any last words, remarked:

"Yes, I want to say that I hope this will be a lesson to me the rest of my life."

Let's hope that war will be a lesson to the nations for the rest of their lives, and a lesson to the United States to attend to its own business, not inviting trouble by meddling with the business of others.

OFF THE CALIFORNIA coast, near San Diego, a United States destroyer with no man on board, maneuvered at high speed, the maneuvers including a 180-degree turn.

And in connection with the possible future war, remember that, THE RADIO ROBOT

THE PATH OF THE FURIOUS FLAMES THAT TODAY CARRIED TRAGEDY INTO THE LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR HOME FOR AGED, EAST END DISTRICT

NUNS, VOLUNTEERS AID RESCUES; OILY MOP SEEN AS CAUSE

Fire, roaring suddenly out of the basement of the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged, Penn and Aiken avenues, last night took the lives of at least 26 persons and sent 217 injured to hospitals.

It was believed 25 of the known dead were inmates of the home, all of whom were over 60 years of age. The other body was tentatively identified as that of a nun.

Two hundred and thirteen aged men and women and 18 nuns were aroused from their slumbers shortly after 10 p. m. to find flames swirling through the dormitories and corridors.

The fire, starting in the basement, swept upward centering its force in the third and fourth floors which housed crippled inmates of the institution.

OILY MOP SEEN AS CAUSE

Fire Chief Richard L. Smith, inspecting ruins of the fire today, said the cause had not been establshed. He had heard, he said, that employes had been oiling and polishing the floors. If this proved correct, he asserted, it might point to the solution, as a mop soaked with oil left on a wooden floor is likely to cause spontaneous combustion.

The home had been inspected regularly, and no one was allowed to smoke, Smith said.

Deputy County Fire Marshal Augustine Lippert visited the scene last night, but declined to discuss circumstances of the blaze pending return of Fire Marshal Thomas L. Pfarr, who went to Harrisburg last night. Pfarr is expected back Monday.

Damage, Smith said, was between $45,000 and $50,000.

Bishop Hugh C. Boyle, of the Catholic diocese of Pittsburgh, left Pittsburgh yesterday on a two weeks' vacation, his destination not disclosed. It was understood today he would not be called back by other officers of the diocese, but that they would settle problems arising from the fire such as housing of inmates.

SIX ALARMS SOUNDED

The first alarm was sounded at 10:18 p. m. and was followed in rapid succession by five others which brought 22 fire companies to the scene.

Within an hour a crowd of close to 15,000 persons jammed the streets for blocks in all directions. Autos were parked for a mile in streets leading to the scene.

FUND STARTED TO HELP HOME

A Jewish friend of the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged was the first to contribute to a fund for the rehabilitation of the institution ruined by fire. Scarcely had the flames been quenched when Harry B. Rosenthall drove up to a Sun-Telegraph reporter and presented a check for $10 on the People's Pittsburgh Trust Company. He said:

"I want you to put this check in the proper hands where it can do some good after this terrible affair."

He refused to be photographed and asked for as little publicity as possible. The check was turned over today to heads of the order.

Patrolman 4 Blocks Away from Fire Collapses

Two city patrolmen, one whose mother perished in the fire which destroyed the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged, and the other, whose mother was rescued, were on duty during the blaze, prevented by duty from aiding in their rescue.

Patrolman Edward Tiley, of the North Side Police Station, assigned to duty four blocks from the home, collapsed this morning when a check of hospitals failed to reveal trace of his mother. The body was in the county morgue, where it was identified by Mrs. Martha Tiley, wife of the patrolman, and his daughter, Miss Martha Tiley, 16, as Mrs. Martha Tiley, 75. The younger Mrs. Tiley collapsed.

More fortunate was Patrolman Gabriel Volletta, of the East End police district, who found his mother, Mrs. Mary Volletta, in Homeopathic Hospital. He, too, was assigned to police duty during the fire and was prevented from searching for his imperiled mother.

Fire Victims Die Kneeling in Prayer

Aged Men, Women Comfort Each Other As Flames Near

They told of aged men and women, facing death calmly, and how some of them died, a prayer on their lips and their last gesture the sign of the cross.

SEES NO PANIC

Frank B. Michaels, of 5356 Hillcrest street, one of the first inside the burning home, said:

"I saw no panic. I carried four people out and one of them was dead. I saw many on their knees praying.

"We tried to get one little woman who had gone to an upper window and cried for help.

"As the smoke started pouring out through the window, we saw her cross herself and close the window. We tried to get a ladder to her but we never saw her again."

NUN REFUSES TO QUIT POST

In the midst of a group of dead and injured, a mild-mannered little woman threatened with death refused to leave her post as fire swept the Little Sisters of the Poor Home last night.

She told her rescuers to go away, asserting:

"I can't leave. Mother Superior is still in here. I must find her. I have to take charge."

She was Sister M. Louise, assistant to Sister M. Agatha, mother superior.

Sister Louise's fears were groundless. Sister Agatha had been rescued and taken to the home of the Pittsburgh Council of Catholic Women.

through the ancient four-story brick and frame building, the first section of which was built in 1851.

The inmates, many of them crippled, remained calm and cool, rescuers reported, although dozens of them apparently were hopelessly cut off from escape.

DIE RECITING PRAYERS

Scores of them knelt on the floor in prayer, fingering rosaries or, with what for some was a final gesture, made the sign of the cross as smoke and fire swirled around them.

Volunteer rescuers, recruited from the neighborhood and from passersby, were the unsung heroes. They risked their lives repeatedly, several of them being overcome or otherwise injured. Without their aid, Fire Chief Smith said, dozens more would have died.

When the first fire companies arrived they found gates to the yard, which is surrounded by an eight-foot brick wall, and doors to the home locked.

Rescuers already had scaled the wall and were taking trapped inmates down the fire escape leading from the center section of the building.

MANY RUSH TO CHAPEL, PERISH

Many of the inmates, trapped, confused and fettered by age, gathered in the chapel on the first floor. It was there that many of those who died were found. Others died beside their beds, apparently unable to move because of their infirmities.

As the first rescue squad charged through the doors after the firemen had battered them down they found a little band of nuns, probably 10 in number, they said, endeavoring to lead 40 or 50 men and women to safety.

Mother Superior Agatha, herself 80 years old, was awakened by the thumping of canes by her crippled charges. She fled through smoke and fire-filled corridors to sound an ancient fire alarm and then organized her nuns for their heroic fight to take the inmates to safety.

Five or six of the less aged inmates leaped from third and fourth floors into life nets.

Others, frightened by the flames and bewildered by their sudden awakening, nearly lost their lives as they refused to step out onto ladders which firemen had placed at their windows. Several had to be saved by force.

ROPES LOWER VICTIMS

Firemen, scaling the Penn avenue side of the building with a hose, entered a fourth-story window and found a tiny, white-haired woman semi-conscious on the floor.

Fastening a rope around her, they lowered her into one of the nets below.

Farther inside, they found a man, apparently dead. His body, too, was dropped to a net.

The hospitals early today reported the following casualties:

West Penn—Seven dead, 53 injured.
St. Francis—Six dead, 83 injured.
Pittsburgh—Two dead, 34 injured.
Homeopathic—Five dead, 36 injured.
Mercy—Eight injured.
St. Margaret's—One injured.
St. John's—Two injured.

Six other bodies were taken directly to the morgue.

Many of the injured, hospital authorities said, had inhaled so much smoke or were so badly burned that the death list seemed certain to mount. Exposure, too, they said, might prove fatal to several of the older inmates, some of whom had been drenched by the fire hose.

Several policemen and firemen and at least a dozen of the volunteer rescuers were among the injured. Most of these were hurt only slightly and were discharged from the hospitals after treatment.

The most seriously hurt of these was a 16-year-old boy, Frank Daly, of 3705 Fifth avenue. He was in the Homeopathic Hospital, his arms cut from breaking through a window to rescue trapped inmates and suffering from smoke inhalation.

A first-aid squad worked on young Daly for 45 minutes, part of the time with oxygen tanks and inhalators, before he was sent to the hospital.

According to police reports, the fire was discovered by two unidentified boys.

They saw the flames in the basement and ran to the Penn avenue entrance of the building. Unable to force the gates, they succeeded in climbing the fence.

They pounded on the doors and shouted, but could not arouse the sleepers.

Two of the inmates, themselves, however, claimed that they discovered the fire. Martin Dowser and Timothy Dillon, both 69, said they smelled smoke and sounded the first warning.

Dowser alone was able to give firemen a theory as to the origin of the fire, when he said:

"I don't know where the fire started, but they had been oiling the floors for two or three days, and some of the oil-soaked cloths might have caught fire."

Neighbors and pedestrians were inside and carrying the partly overcome victims down the fire escape when the firemen arrived.

Safety and rescue teams from the United States Mine Bureau and the Duquesne Light Company labored valiantly for over two hours as they sought to revive those who were overcome. Six inhalators and a number of operators from the Mine Safety Appliances Company were kept in constant use.

All available taxicabs in the city were sent to the home and augmented the passenger cars and ambulances in carrying the injured away.

Chaos which marked the first few moments of the rescue work gave way to order as police, firemen and others co-ordinated the efforts of their forces.

Heroism abounded on every side. Nuns, firemen, police and volunteers repeatedly braved almost certain death to bring another body from the flaming interior.

One of the nuns, unidentified, started into the building when the flames were at their height. As a rescue worker halted her she said:

"I must go in. I have to save the holy eucharist."

Father J. A. Young, of St. Lawrence's Church, stepped forward, and he and the other man groped their way into the chapel and carried the blessed sacrament to safety.

SCREAMS SPUR RESCUERS

Here and there, the scream of a dying man or woman spurred the crews to renewed activities.

Men staggered from the building, an inert body in their arms, and collapsed, gasping for air, only to raly and return to their task.

Dr. Daniel E. Sable, chief city surgeon, arrived shortly after the first fire trucks and organized city physicians, doctors from nearby residences and hospitals into a smoothly-working unit.

More than a dozen priests headed by Father Thomas F. Coakley, pastor of Sacred Heart Church, moved around the lawn of the home and St. Lawrence's School and rectory, nearby, where an emergency hospital had been established, giving the last rites to the dying and comforting the injured.

The fire was under control shortly after 1:15 o'clock this morning, Fire Chief Smith said, although it continued smoldering long afterwards.

It is his theory that the fire started in the basement beneath the main entrance on Penn avenue, shot up the elevator shaft and "mushroomed" out into the upper floors.

The third and fourth floors, he said, were damaged the worst.

INSPECTIONS REGULAR

Smith, saying the building was inspected regularly three or four times a year, added:

"Unfortunately it was not equipped with a sprinkler system. Had one been installed, this great loss of life and property damage might have been averted."

In the hospitals, the calm with which the rescued had stood their ordeal cracked.

Dozens of the aged victims became hysterical. Many of them, gray-haired and in their seventies, mumbled prayers over and over.

The emergency wards were jammed beyond capacities in all four hospitals and the victims were carried to other parts of the hospital as they were taken from the automobiles and ambulances.

Coroner William J. McGregor, who started an investigation last night, said today that he would not call witnesses to his office for a few days, to give them a chance to recover from shock and injuries.

OLD FOLK HANGING FROM WINDOWS

A striking story of the tragedy was told by A. J. Rodgers, 540 Gross street, who arrived at the same time the first fire companies did. He said:

"Flames were pouring through the roof, although it was only two or three minutes after the first alarm had sounded.

"The fire apparently had been burning for 10 or 15 minutes, as flames were shooting out of the middle section, which faces Aiken avenue.

"Old women and men were hanging out of the windows, shouting for help. There was a background of flame and smoke behind them.

"A nun, half dazed, walked up to me as the first of the victims was led out. 'Is there a doctor here?' she asked.

"I found a doctor and he gave her a hypodermic. Then he sent her to a hospital.

"A police lieutenant passed and I asked his permission to organize motorists into emergency ambulance squads.

"By the time the ambulances arrived they came from every hospital in the district—many of the injured, and some that we were almost certain were dead, had been started to the hospital.

"The dead and injured were laid on the lawn and on benches as the cars came up and were loaded into the machines as rapidly as possible.

"While I was working on one of the chains on the fire escape—we were lined from the fourth floor to the ground, passing down the dead and the others—I saw eight bodies burned to a crisp.

"No one can give enough praise to the volunteer rescuers. They rushed into the building alongside the firemen and policemen, frequently risking their lives."

CROSS IN HAND, WOMAN DIES

A little, gray-haired woman crouched in the corner of a room of the burning home of the Little Sisters of the Poor last night, a crucifix in her right hand, several trinkets in the other. She prayed and wept, cried in her agony as her clothing caught fire and enveloped her body.

H. P. Veder, of 131 South Graham street, groping about in the flame-swept building, found her and carried her outside.

"Take it and give it to my relatives. Tell them to pray for me."

At Homeopathic Hospital she was pronounced dead.

Firemen Forced To Break Doors To Reach Blaze

Edward Eichenlaub, Jr., of 419 South Atlantic avenue, who said he turned in the alarm for the fire last night, says he noticed the flames in the northeast corner of the basement as he walked past the building.

He ran over and kicked and pounded on the door. Eichenlaub said, until a nun leaned from a window and heard his warning. He then ran to the police box in front of St. Lawrence's Church and turned in the alarm. Eichenlaub said:

"When the firemen arrived, they had to break in the doors. I went in with them.

"Flames shot up the main stairway and ate their way to both sides, down the halls. The fire was worst on the fourth floor.

"The nuns were active in aiding people to fire escapes. They fought firemen and others who tried to put them out.

GIRL DESCRIBES SCENE OF HORROR AS AGED LEAP TO NETS

Miss Garrahan, a Sun-Telegraph reporter, was one of the first to reach the burning home of the Little Sisters of the Poor. In the following article she gives a graphic description of the catastrophe.

By MARGARET GARRAHAN.

Flames were just breaking through the roof of the dormitory of the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged when I arrived at the scene. Men and women could be seen at the windows, afraid to leap into the life nets held by firemen and volunteers below.

Dozens of ladders were placed at several points along the side of the building, and the firemen fought madly to save the trapped inmates, with thousands of spectators looking on.

Fire trucks were summoned from everywhere, as alarm after alarm rang in. Lines of fire hose spread around the exercise court like a spiderweb and firemen with extra ladders battled the crowd, which gathered in the court, in order to get through.

The men carrying the life net kept going from one side of the building to the other continually. They, too, were impeded by the crowd.

Desperation finally seized some of the inmates, who had at first feared the leap into the life net, and in a final attempt to save their lives, they made the jump.

The crowd swelled. Thousands packed the sidewalks, stood on the streets, and sought the top of buildings across the street. At the peak of the fire, there were thousands watching.

AMBULANCES ARRIVE

Ambulances came, went away with their loads, and returned in a continuous stream throughout the duration of the fire. Police patrol wagons were called for emergencies, as well as a corps of taxis which lined the streets. Everywhere there were policemen fighting to keep the crowd in check.

Once, when I went around to the other side of the building, I watched a Duquesne Light first-aid squad working in their efforts to resuscitate a victim of suffocation.

Again, I talked with a young man who had saved four of the inmates. He was just one of the heroes of the catastrophe. I saw another who had saved six of the aged.

NURSES AT SCENE

Everywhere there were nurses and doctors and internes carrying stretchers. Often a group would come through the high gates in the wall surrounding the burning building, carrying a stretcher with the still form on it covered with a blanket.

Many stories circulated through the crowd. One was about a Sister, who, finding herself cut off on all sides by flames, knelt down on the smoking floor, and prayed for rescue. Several minutes later, firemen reached her and carried her to safety.

The inmates who were able climbed to a nearby roof where they waited for help. But there were many who were helpless, a large proportion of whom were not reached until it was too late.

SISTER LEADS RESCUE

Sister Agatha, mother superior of the home, was outstanding in the heroism she displayed when she led a band of rescue workers into the flaming building. After leading many of her feeble charges to safety, she was forcibly brought back from the structure by firemen when the sheets of fire endangered her own life. Two other sisters, participating in the rescue work, were overcome after saving many of the inmates in spite of the warnings of firemen and police.

Shortly after I arrived, I found an old man who had been injured when he fell two stories in an elevator shaft after panic had seized him while attempting to escape. He said that he had broken the glass in the elevator door and leaped for the cable in order to reach the first floor. He missed the cable and hurtled two floors below. As I was talking to him, the first ambulance arrived at the scene and took him to the hospital.

SURVIVORS SILENT

When the fire was nearly out, I found a group of survivors, all of them men, in a room in St. Lawrence's School across the street from the ruined building. They sat there in silence. All were dazed by their experience. The terrific loss of life had made an impression on them that will never be erased, an impression from which many of them will never recover. The shock of the loss of their friends who perished in the catastrophe, the horror of it all, had left them speechless.

There was not a single man who spoke directly of the fire. The only comment they made concerned the safety of those who were not there with them.

The most pitiful thing incident to the fire was, to me, the cries of those who were crippled or paralyzed, unable to make a motion toward saving themselves, many of whom were numbered among the victims.

The next most pitiful thing was the irreparable damage to those who lived, to know the fate of their fellow inmates.

FIREMEN ON INSPECTION TOUR TODAY AFTER THE LAST FL ICKERING FIRE HAD BEEN PUT OUT AFTER HARD FIGHT

HEROIC PRIESTS ADMINISTER LAST RITES

Two Retired Fire Captains Answer Sirens Once More; Policeman Seeks Mother

While firemen battled like madmen to enter the burning Little Sisters of the Poor Home last night, volunteer workers performed heroic deeds rescuing screaming men and women, carrying out bodies that lay still in flame swept hallways and risking their lives in a dozen ways.

Two retired fire captains and a fireman off duty answered shrieking sirens and hurried to the burning buildings.

A policeman on duty hearing of the fire hurried to the scene and searched the building for his mother, while police men who had rescued her and rushed her to a hospital.

PRIESTS AT SCENE

A dozen or more priests from Catholic churches in many parts of Pittsburgh rushed to the scene of the disaster to render aid where they could and administer the last rites to victims as they were carried to the ground. Father J. A. Young of St. Lawrence's Church took part in rescue work until he was stopped by firemen. With Father Young was Father Francis Bailey of the same church.

Other priests on the scene included Father James M. Deaney of St. Agnes Church, Father Thomas Cruise and Father Victor J. Kennedy and Father Howard Carroll of Sacred Heart Church, Father John Joyce of St. John's, Father Bernard McGuigan of St. Anne's Mt. Vale, Father Vincent Burke of St. Paul's Cathedral, Father Justin Gallagher and Father Andrew King of St. Mary's and Father V. J. Rieland of St. Raphael's.

AID IN RESCUES

Father Carroll, aroused from his studies at Sacred Heart Church, was one of the first of the volunteers to reach the scene.

Flames poured from the windows on every side. The priest circled the building, then saw a fire escape. Through smoke and fire he climbed to the fourth floor and in the brief period of the few minutes which followed he carried out five dead and dying administering the last rites as best he could.

On another fire escape Father Rieland climbed to the same floor and brought down five bodies.

EX-FIREMEN SAVE 9

Patrolman Danniel O'Donnell of East End Station fought his way through burning corridors to the third floor and stumbled over the body of a woman burned terribly. She died in his arms as he made his way to the outside.

Former Fire Capts. Phil Cooke, 57, of 4529 Friendship avenue and William Hutchinson, 58, of 315 Collins avenue heard once more shrieking sirens and gave way to the call that to them once had been second nature. Cooke, searching the upper floors, carried out five women, three of whom were dead. Hutchinson carried out four, one of them dead. They reached the fire-swept upper floors by way of fire escapes on the Aiken avenue side of the building.

CARRIES OUT 4

L. L. Trewbridge, 26, of 418 North Highland avenue, scaled the escape on the same side of the building and carried out four women and Thomas Cox, of 338 North Atlantic avenue, rescued two women.

William H. Beers, Jr., of 526 St. James place, son of the commercial manager of the Pittsburgh Railways Company, reported helping to carry two old men from the third floor. Jack Powell, of 3222 Powhatan street, said he rescued two men and H. P. Veede, South Graham street, said he rescued five women, one of whom was overcome by smoke.

FIRE CALLS 800 POLICE TO DUTY

More than 800 city policemen and detectives summoned from every district were on duty at the Little Sisters of the Poor Home and at hospitals and the county morgue after last night's fire. Police Supt. Peter P. Walsh personally directed assignment of the police. It was the largest police "coverage" of any major disaster in years.

Forty of the city's force of 48 detectives mingled in the crowds at the fire to prevent looting, while mounted police and motorcycle men, many of whom were called from their beds, aided in the direction of traffic around the burning building.

Tragic Fire Roaring Through Home for Aged Side-by-Side With Death

A HELPLESS CROSS SILHOUETTED AGAINST THE BLAZING SKY . . . . THE PEAK OF THE FIRE THAT SWIFTLY CARRIED DEATH TO THE OLD AND FEEBLE

Aged Inmates, Rescuers Describe Tragic Scenes As Fire Claimed 26

I was on the fourth floor, washing, when somebody shouted 'Fire.'

"I smelled the smoke. I didn't think it would be very bad, so I ran down the fire escape in my pajamas, without stopping to pick up any of my belongings. I had plenty of time. I lost everything I had, including a $50 watch.

"I think it started in the men's dining room, on the first floor of the chapel building. The chapel's on the second floor. It's too awful to talk about."

Patrolman Thomas J. Cummings, East End Police Station, returning from a meeting of the Fraternal Order of Police, saw flames when he reached Negley avenue and Baum boulevard. Hurrying to the scene he joined the rescue work. He said:

"A sister was on the lawn crying:

"'Those old people in the third floor can't get out!'

"Hundreds were working to get into the first and second floors. I climbed to the third floor and, with 'Red' Griffen, an automobile mechanic, we carried out six. The last two were burned and dead.

"They were strewn about the floors, having collapsed from lack of air. They evidently tried to get out but were prevented by the screens. Many dropped in their tracks. The second woman I carried out was white-haired. When I sat her down on the lawn she said:

"'God bless you.'

"There were more than 100 in the structure at that time. Some threw cushions from the second floor to make beds."

E. G. Carter, fireman, 412 North Aiken avenue, said:

"I was off duty when I heard of the fire, and hurried over to aid the boys. In all my 15 years as a fireman I have never seen anything like it. I found a ladder that was not crowded and climbed into the fourth floor, where I found three bodies and carried them out. They were women and all were dead."

One of the first to reach the fire was George Grime, of 418 Forty-second street. Driving along Penn avenue, he saw the flames and aided in the early rescues, carrying two badly burned men inmates down the fire escapes. He took them to Mercy Hospital.

The Rev. L. H. Harris, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, 151 Pearl street, said:

"Had it not been for the work of the volunteer helpers, the loss of life would have been appalling. Volunteers leaped to the task as soon as engines arrived, and not only carried ladders to the building, but mounted them and entered the flaming structure. One young man rescued two women.

"They also dragged hose along and acted as litter bearers when the dead and injured were carried out. Taxicabs and private cars were offered freely to aid in the work. Too much praise cannot be given the volunteer helpers, without detracting from the excellent work of the firemen and policemen."

George Stokes, of Police Emergency Car No. 6 and Traffic Officer Henry Kalhout reported carrying out eight persons, some of them dead, Stokes said:

"We rushed to the third floor, the women's department, and saw the inmates strewn about. Some were in an attitude of prayer, others were dazed and mumbling. It was hard to make them understand that we would take them down the ladders.

"Some had to be dragged to the windows. They were all badly frightened. Across the room I could see a woman on a bed, but was driven back by flames."

Martin McClean, inmate, said:

"I had a bad cold, so I had the covers over my head. But I saw another old man stepping out the window. It was the fourth floor and I wondered why he was doing that. So I asked him what was wrong.

"He said there was a fire, so I got up and got out myself."

Gabriel Volletto, of 6951 Upland street, policeman, hearing of the fire, hurried to the scene and began a frantic search of the burning building for his mother, an inmate. Flames finally forced him outside, where he learned his mother had been rescued and sent to Homeopathic Hospital, where he found her slightly injured.

Patrolman John O'Connor, 610 Larchhall street, said:

"I was off duty but followed the engines. I went to the hospital ward on the third floor. It was filled with old women. One woman had a weight attached to her leg. I broke the cord and carried her out. She was unconscious.

"With Hugh Lavery I carried out five, one of them the assistant mother superior. Wandering around dazed, she said:

"'I can't leave. Mother Superior is still in here. I must find her. I have to take charge.'"

Hugh Lavery said one of the women he rescued from the second floor was kneeling before a statue of the Virgin praying. He said:

"The assistant mother superior told me that there were 130 women and 120 men in the home with 16 nurses."

Two brothers are credited today with the rescue of 25 persons from the holocaust last night. Robert Dillon, 20, and Jack Dillon, 32, 5328 Kincaid street, were on the scene when the fire started. The younger brother carried 15 from the flames, it is said, before he was overcome by smoke and carried out, himself. Jack Dillon rescued 10.

AGED VICTIMS DIE IN PRAYER

the rescuers who forced their way to the third floor. He said:

"All the men stood by the aged women, comforting them to the end. We had to rescue them almost against their will.

"My friends and I arrived shortly after the fire broke out and the firemen were already there.

"Up on the third floor men and women were on their knees, praying. The women were even calmer than the men."

TOPPLE TO FLOOR

McConville said he and the other rescuers saw kneeling men and women topple to the floor, prayers unfinished, as they carried other victims through the smoke and fire.

Charles Schaffer, of 5137 Schenley street, another of the first rescuers, said:

"It looked to me as though everyone ran for the chapel when the fire broke out. You'll find that more died there than anywhere else. I carried out two dead myself."

E. P. Kelly, of 5220 Coral street, said the fire started in the basement of the northeast corner of the building. He added:

"Floors which had been waxed for many years fed the flames rapidly.

WORSE THAN WAR

"I was in the World War and saw nothing compared to this.

"There were old men there who couldn't walk, men with soft bones, broken in the first rush for the chapel. I helped to carry out at least 20. Many of them were dead."

Frank Ward, of Melwood avenue, told of seeing dead men and women in all parts of the third floor. He said:

"There were people lying around on every side of the third floor. I helped carry five out of the men's dormitory. I saw four men, burned to a crisp, in one corner. That was before the fire had gotten through the roof."

Mexico City Fliers Return to New York

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., July 25.—(AP.)—Seth Yerrington and Edward Maloney, who crashed south of Brownsville, Tex., recently while attempting a non-stop New York to Mexico City flight, returned here last night in their plane after a leisurely journey northward.

They said they were undecided whether they would attempt the Mexico City flight again.

Sisters of Poor Obtain Funds By Begging

The Little Sisters of the Poor came to Pittsburgh from France in 1851. Principal of their vows is to support the work of their order with door-to-door begging. The buildings on Penn avenue and all their supplies were obtained in this manner.

The Sisters have retained their quaint French costumes of black and white, with black bonnets. All nuns serve their novitiate in France. A number of American women have joined the order.

The home had 213 inmates, in charge of 18 nuns.

IDENTIFICATION AID ASKED

Relatives and friends of the inmates of the Little Sisters of the Poor home are requested to communicate with the coroner in an endeavor to identify the dead, or locate the missing in last night's fire.

Chief Clerk James L. Davidson said that some of the inmates might have returned to the homes of relatives or friends in the confusion and for this reason a complete checkup is advisable. It is only through relatives that some of the unidentified dead may be identified.

Coroner's deputies and police were checking all names obtainable from the hospitals, with the list of inmates obtained at the home.

6 ALARMS CALL 142 FIREMEN

One hundred and forty-two firemen from 18 engine companies and four truck companies, fought the fire in the home of the Little Sisters of the Poor last night. In addition to these were Fire Chief Richard L. Smith and five district chiefs.

Starting at 10:17 p. m. when Box 576 was sounded, five other alarms were sounded within 20 minutes. It was the first time in two years that six alarms were sounded for a fire.

HIGHLAND PARK, Ill., July 25.—(AP.)—Julius Rosenwald, capitalist and philantropist, was under the care of a physician today, although his condition was not regarded as serious. He was sent to bed at his home for a rest. Last April he was also ordered to bed after too strenuous activity in his varied interests.

PHILLIPS URGED TO RUN FOR COUNCIL

Little, Mackrell Fight To Prove Interesting; Democrats Get Petitions

Petitions are in circulation to place Councilman John M. Phillips, of Carrick, manufacturer and civic leader, on the Republican primary ballot as a candidate to succeed himself.

When Phillips was elected a few weeks ago by Mayor Kline and the members of Council to fill the vacancy caused by the death of George J. Kambach, he announced that he did not intend to seek a full term.

Concerning the nominating petitions, Phillips said last night:

"I have not authorized any person to circulate petitions. I don't intend going out making campaign speeches to be elected."

ONE PLACE OPEN

Councilman Harry A. Little's candidacy for register of wills against Joseph N. Mackrell, incumbent, may prove one of the most interesting contests in the primary battle.

Little is serving the second year of a four-year term and if elected his colleagues in Council and Mayor Kline would fill his place until the first subsequent election.

ROONEY GETS BOOST

Enthusiastic North Siders already have picked Representative James J. Rooney, lieutenant of State Senator James J. Coyne, for that vacancy.

One of the familiar aspects of a political campaign developed yesterday when T. J. McGovern, engineer of Mt. Oliver Borough, took out nominating petitions for county commissioner.

Harry Lutz, former member of the county tax board, has taken out enough petition blanks to place in nomination Democratic candidates for all city and county offices to be filled this year.

The entries for the three members of the directors of the poor board has been increased to 15, the latest to take out petitions being Bernard L. Flynn, John W. Cost, W. H. Prosser, Charles N. Haviland and John R. McDowell.

RALLY SHUNNED BY M'GOVERN

The Malone-McGovern Independents, with Commissioner C. C. McGovern missing, met yesterday in a five-hour strategy conference in the Keystone Club.

James F. Malone, state secretary of property and supplies; Ralp S. Smith, deputy attorney general; Councilmen Charles Anderson and Robert Garland and former Councilman P. J. McArdle attended.

McGovern was reported "out of of town," although it was understood he was to have been at the conference. Malone said:

"Nothing transpired at the meeting. We just talked generalities and had a social afternoon."

The fact that McGovern did not attend the meeting was considered to indicate a lack of interest on his part in the activities of the Malone group. The three councilmen, who will fight for places on an independent basis, were believed ready to begin their campaign.

Clergyman Enters Contest for Council

The Rev. A. V. B. Hightower, Negro candidate for Council in 1929, when he received 18,000 votes, has announced that he will again seek the Republican nomination for Council in next September's primary. He is assistant pasto, of Calvary Baptist Church.

Mother, Six Nuns At Women's Council

Mother Agatha and six nuns are being cared for at the home of the Pittsburgh Council of Catholic Women, 5216 Penn avenue. One of the six, Sister Beatrice, found to be in critical condition when she was received at the Council home, was removed to St. John's Hospital.

WITH NO CREW WAS DOING THE WORK OF 60 MEN. A thousand or 10,000 ships might be controlled on the water, under the water or in the air, without risking human life.

Science and money combined make a powerful combination. This world will be on the way to civilization when governments take as much trouble about the happiness of the working masses as they do about new ways of destroying life.

Indians Balk Solution Of Co-Ed's Murder

WHITE RIVER, Ariz., July 25.—(AP.)—Efforts to determine the circumstances in the murder of Henrietta Schmerler, 23-year-old "pale face" co-ed who came from Columbia University to study Indian tribal lore, met with resistance today in a stolid refusal of Apaches to assist in any way.

The Indians were angered by the holding of one of their youths, Claude Dickey, but authorities declared he was not connected with Miss Schmerler's death and was held for selling beer. He had been acting as the young girl student's guide and interpreter. Gilbert denied he had accompanied her to a tribal dance last Saturday night.

The girl's body was found, badly beaten and the clothing torn from it, in a rain-soaked gully four miles from the Apache reservation. Rain had obliterated any clues. Deputies who discovered the body after searching for the girl since her disappearance Saturday said she had evidently put up a furious fight.

Several theories were advanced. One was that attentions paid the young woman by the braves had aroused the jealousy of some squaw.

Aids Fire Rescue Work Despite Rib in Cast

Hindered by a broken rib in a plaster cast, Harold Lindgreen, proprietor of a garage at 5160 Penn avenue, joined with neighbors of the Little Sisters of the Poor Home in the fire rescue work. Part of the cast broke from his ribs as he carried out the last old woman.

Floor Burns Feet, Woman Crawls Back to Bed

One aged inmate of the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged protested when a fireman started to assist her to the street and safety. The fireman said:

"I found my way into a room where an old lady stood, tapping her foot on the floor. She said to me:

"'I'm going to get back into bed; this hot floor is bothering my rheumatism.'

"She did get back into bed and I had to pick her up and carry her down the ladder."

Now I know why it is that so many folks have been making such brief trips out of town, instead of making the usual permanent break with Pittsburgh until fall.

They have all been awaiting the Erie Saddle Club Horse Show in Erie, which begins on Thursday and lasts until August 1. And ever so many Sewickley and Pittsburgh folks are exhibiting their favorites from the stables of the Pittsburgh Hunt Club, the Allegheny Country Club, and the Green Valley stables.

Mrs. Raymond Elmore Earp the former Gretchen Schoonmaker is entering five horses from the Green Valley stables. They include Golden Archer. The Golfer. McGoldrick. Mountain Delight and Gaiety.

Five Entries

And from the Allegheny Country Club stables Buckley Byers and his sister Nancy will enter two ponies one of which is White Sox the other is a new pony. And Mrs. James Francis Burke is entering Snowflakes.

Mrs. Charles Flaccus may enter her horse King Joy. From the Pittsburgh Hunt Club and George H. Calvert, Jr. has three entries. Misbehavin', Golden Dawn and Breezy Buddy which he will ride. They all won ribbons at the Sewickley Horse Show this year you'll recall. David I. McCahill may motor to Erie to attend the show.

Members of Congress of Women's Clubs Busy Making Plans For Summer Vacations

Club news is scarce these vacation days, with the members flitting about the country. Aside from a sundry card party or two being given by the stay-at-homes, there is nothing but travel news. Quite a few of the members of the Congress of Women's Clubs are planning vacations, and several are at summer homes.

Miss Madge Gilmore, a member of the Congress, is in New York, the guest of Miss Alice Morrow, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Dwight Morrow.

Mrs. F. C. Kinney expects to leave August 1 for two weeks in Carey, O. and Mrs. W. H. Francies and Mrs. R. T. Alexander will leave in September.

Mrs. M. R. Moxley has just returned from a tour of Michigan and Mrs. F. B. Heppenstall is at her summer cottage. Mrs. H. C. Brider is planning several brief week-end trips during the summer and Mrs. H. D. Stark returned recently from two delightful weeks on Lake Chautauqua.

In August Mrs. William E. Morgan plans to leave for Wildwood, N. Y., and another August vacationist will be Mrs. J. E. White, who is planning a motor trip to Windsor, Canada.

Schenley Court No. 34, Order of the Amaranth, will hold a Bingo party in Serbian Hall, Fifth avenue, Oakland, Monday evening. Hostesses will include Mrs. Marie Heuber, Mrs. Annette Frey, Mrs. Elsie Kessler and Miss Betty Heuber.

SPARKLING EMBROIDERY MOST EFFECTIVE FOR EVENING WEAR

—Sketched in Paris—

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, July 25.—There is a discreet brilliance about some of the new evening frocks that makes them shine wherever they may be. For the gala frock there is nothing nicer than tulle with touches of strass or crystal. It is much more youthful than satin and gives that scintillating touch that suggests a wonderful evening is in progress. Of course, the sparkling embroideries must be expertly handled, otherwise there is a Christmas tree air about the frock that is apt to be theatrical and tawdy. And that always strikes a pathetic note, as if the wearer despaired ever so sparkling unless she festooned herself with enough strass and other bright stones, to blind anyone to her real appearance. But when it is good, it is like the little girl—it is very, very good. And such a frock will do more to cheer up drooping spirits and depression than a gallon of tonics and pills.

* * *

TO DEMONSTRATE to you just how a great dressmaker uses strass, we are sending you a sketch of Chanel's new and lovely evening frock. It is in delicate pink tulle with the shoulder straps and a large flat appliqued bow-knot of solid strass and crystal embroidery. The bow-knot is attached all round the edges of the two loops and half way down the edges of the two ends. From here they hang loose. The bodice is simple in front with all the interest at the back in a slightly interesting strapping arrangement. Two circular tiers form the skirt.

* * *

VIONNET MAKES the most effective afternoon ensemble. The frock is of printed blue leves on a white mousseline ground. The lines are simple but smart with a softly draped scarf in one piece with the shoulder yoke and knotted in front. Fagotting marks the piecings on the skirt which is flaring below the hips. There is a blue leather belt. The caped coat is of bright blue velveteen and is slightly fitted at the waistline.

Screen Stars Complain Of Work

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, July 25.

When the stars complain of the number of pictures they have to make a year, there is one man in Hollywood who can sit back and smile. He is Dave Allen, head of Central Casting Bureau.

More often than not Allen knew them when they were extras and were crying just as loud because they couldn't get enough work.

Irene Rich.

There was a time for instance when Janet Gaynor and Alice White had such a small wardrobe they were sent to play cleaned girls and other atmosphere bits and the costumes were furnished. Sue Carol on the other hand spent a month as a dress-extra because she had plenty of gowns. Going further back Jeannette Loff and Claire Windsor did the same thing.

The new Mrs. Rudy Vallee, Nee Fay Webb, worked extra for seven months before M. G. M. signed her. Dick Arlen was a dress-extra also Charlie Farrell. And in those days Charlie wore his father's clothes. Marion Nixon played collegiate atmosphere and according to Allen was a mediocre extra. Don Alvarado broke in as Rudolph Valentino's double. Frank Albertson's name was in the bureau files back to his childhood. And the courtly Ramon Novarro once registered as a tango dancer.

It was Allen who gave Irene Rich her first extra job. Today her daughter Patricia is following the same difficult route to a career.

One time between prosperity waves Polly Moran did extra work and was glad to get it.

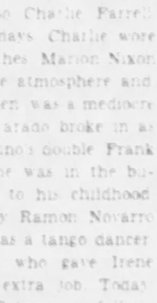
Of course there's the case of Zasu Pitts. Allen told her she would never have a chance in the films.

As for Clarke Gable, Hollywood's latest crush, he tried three times to crash the gate via the extra route and failed on every occasion.

All of these Allen knew. That's why temperament is just another racket to him.

LATEST GOSSIP

The world is full of coincidences. Dorothy Lee got a new contract from R-K-O the day she filed her suit for divorce. . . . Thelma Todd will change her name to Allison Lloyd for her part in Roland West's "Corsair." . . . was all figured out by numerology. All of which probably will interest Hal Roach, who has the blonde actress under contract to make six comedies as Thelma Todd.



June Collyer

Reports to the contrary there still is no definite date for the marriage of Betty Compson and Hugh T. Revor. . . . But what do you know about "Stu" Erwin and June Collyer? One of the prettiest and nicest of the unattached girls this is lost to the young-men-about-Hollywood. . . . Dorothy Mackaill the incorrigible talks of going to Honolulu again before making a picture. And she's just irresponsible enough to do it. . . . Times aren't too bad for an M. G. M. executive to give "Slickem" the studio boothlick a slightly outmoded but still impressive eight-cylindered coupe. "Just for being a good boy," beams Slickem. . . . The Wampas motion picture publicity men are to revive their custom of selecting "baby stars." Results will be known in 30 days.

WHY MOGULS GO BALMY

You have to know the high tension of a big film executive's office to really appreciate this one.

A recent child-actor sensation and his mother were waiting for someone at the M. G. M. lot. At length a message arrived that the appointment would be delayed half an hour.

"Well, says the mother, "I guess we'll go over to L. B. Mayer's office and kill a little time."

JACK'S FIRST

Somewhat less boisterous than of yore, Jack Oakie has been waiting his first assignment since his trouble with Paramount. It will be the comedy lead in "Touchdown," the college story by Francis Wallace, who once passed out news for the late Knute Rockne. Dick Arlen plays the romantic lead. Norman McLeod directs.

Goes West

After more than a year at New York studios, Nancy Carroll has returned to Hollywood to appear opposite Charles Buddy Rogers in "Mary Makes a Call."

Comic Movie Laughable In Penn

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

Romance without mush and comedy without gags make "The Man in Possession" an interesting and pleasing screen feature in the Penn. Robert Montgomery, who has been coming along rapidly as a young leading man in the films, has come a little farther in this one in which he registers as a light comedian of ability. Irene Purcell plays opposite him and she too impresses in a role that has a slight tinge of the adventuress in it.

It might be called a drawing room comedy were it not for the fact that some of the funniest comedy takes place in a dining room and a kitchen. Miss Purcell's home is the scene of most of the action, and it is an English home. Miss Purcell is a little slow with her bill-paying and as a result Mr. Montgomery is placed in "possession" as a representative of the sheriff. His dad had just put him out of his home because he wouldn't go to Canada to relieve the family from disgrace.

AGREES TO BUTTLE

Miss Purcell is about to entertain company, so Bob agrees to buttle for the occasion. The company when it arrives proves to be his father, mother and brother, fiance of Miss Purcell.

Imagine the situation and figure out the solution complicated by another admirer of Miss Purcell making three, for you may be sure our hero is not slow to realize her charms, too.

C. Aubrey Smith as an Englishman of the middle-class type gives an excellent characterization as the father, and Charlotte Greenwood helps much in the creation of laughs as Miss Purcell's maid.

SCHOOLER ON STAGE

On the stage Dave Schooler is a featured performer in "Get Set," which also has the Three Jacks, pepp steppers; the Phelps Twins, singing and dancing girls; the Three Swifts, and Chesler Hale dancing ensemble. There also are four unfunny "blackouts." Dick Liebert's organlogue is best liked when it swings into old-time ballads.

The Sun-Telegraph Globe Trotter film includes scenes of the test flight of the Graf Zeppelin preliminary to the beginning of its journey to the polar regions.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., July 25.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

This must have been an awful hot spell. California papers are printing their own heat prostrations. If it hadn't been for Secretary Mellon and Stimson and O. O. McIntyre there wouldn't have been any American tourist trade this summer. Financial depression is so bad that American millionaire polo players are having to play on American horses. I didn't know it till I was reading the statistics the other day, but the Argentine republic furnished us over 90 per cent of our tanned hides and gigolos.

A Columnist's Sec'y Jots Down a Few Notes

Dear W. W.: Do you know a Princess Chavchavadze? She called . . . anxious to talk to you personally . . . Miss Mala Brand, of the London Express, is in town digging up things about New Yorkers and wondered if you were a big, fat grouch. . . . I told her you weren't fat. The Calif. Mfr's of Carbonated Beverages are burning to a crisp over your remark that stone dust is what makes most mineral waters fizz. . . . They assert it is an inaccuracy and a libel on the entire industry. It appears that in the old days beverages and waters were fizzled with carbonic gas made from the dripping of sulphuric acid upon marble dust, but never did any marble dust or stone dust enter the beverages and so on and so on and so on.

The investigation that the White House authorities made of the alleged news leaks was a farce and everyone anticipated that it would be dropped as it was. . . . As a result, however, Hoover's secretary, Theodore Joslin, may resign, or else. . . . Jack Nutley phoned, wants to known the penalty for shooting Jack Diamond out of season. . . . You wanted Ring Lardner's address. He may be reached at Whitehaven, Pa. . . . Grantland Rice tolo me . . . Ring still is very ill; drop him a word or so. . . . Before he left, some newspapermen took the King of Siam into a West Fortieth street speakeasy, and the mob in the place thought they were being kidded, and kept slapping him on the back and yelling, "Hello, Kingy ol' boy!" . . . He took it in the reg'lar guy manner.

On September 4 Leo Reisman and the Central Park Casino will melt. . . . His very popular pianist, Eddy Duchin, will be starred in his place with a 12-piece crew. . . . Intimates of the late James P. Donahue wonder if that backgammon-welching yarn you ran in Portrait was for Donahue. . . . I told them I didn't know. . . . They pointed out that Donahue died from an accidental overdose of sleeping medicine, which he took quite regularly, his nerves being N. G. . . . It appears that his story and another are similar and the friends feel that you are confused. . . . The other tale happened in a Park Avenue club, very exclusive, at which a backgammon player lost a million, but the debt was settled for $30,000. . . . Donahue never played backgammon for more than $25 a game. . . . The friends feel, too, that you would make a hit with Donahue's pals by so asserting. . . . He didn't want to die, and was not a poor sport, but a good loser, etc. . . . I'm sure you'd want to say so—just to keep the record unblemished.

Talk about burning a person up. . . . Ben Lahr is going mad on the coast because his surefire hit, "Flying High," in which he will also be screened, is being re-arranged. . . . Charlotte Greenwood, also in the flicker, will be played up heavier than Bert, because her husband, Martin Broones, who played piano for her in vaudeville, has been selected to re-write it! . . . Leave it to Hollywood to "improve" something that enjoyed smash success on Broadway. Can't you just hear Lahr giving out that gungungung! when he heard that news? . . . Jimmy Walker phoned. Said to tell you he didn't walk out on Brouns's show to be a smarty or anything like that, but he can understand why you so suspected. . . . He had to leave that early, he explained, because at 10 p. m. he had a date to help inaugurate that television hookup. . . . He talks very cute.

Tallulah Bankhead is on her way to Hope Williams's ranch. . . . Katherine Curtiss, the former international golfer, and Waldo Murphy, a realtor, were secretly married the other day. . . . Marlene Dietrich's husband just gave her a diamond ring containing 42 carrats. . . . That ought to give her Kleig eyes. . . . Louise Gywnn, who is 19 and whose picture you saw in the papers and admired so the other day is a relative of the Stotesburys, if you please. . . . A very sweet person, by the way. . . . Saw her at the fight and it was her very first fight! . . . And what do you think she said when Sharkey and Walker squared off? She said: "Oooh, look at that lovely moon—all I kept seeing was Mickey—that darling Mickey—whose gameness was much more romantic." The Argonaut and J. Malin are no more.

King Features wants to know what liner Miss Joyce is taking. . . . Understand she applied secretly for a pilot's license. . . . Goodness! Hasn't she been flying high enough? . . . Marjorie Smith, who wrote "No Bed of Roses," is doing another, called "God Have Mercy on Me," for Macauley. . . . In London, they tell me, the waltz is more popular than ever. . . . In London it would be. . . . And the girls there are wearing herby hats! . . . With long-curled feathers! . . . The smarties here are wearing 'em, too.

Tudor City has reduced the wages of the house maids and cleaning women 10 per cent, but they haven't trimmed the guest charge of 60 cents per hour for cleaning service. . . . The literary book club racket is suffering a great deal these days. . . . Making no money and desperate. . . . Clubs no longer contract for a book on a royalty basis; they buy outright and split with the author on a 60-40 term, as a result the clubs are getting the second-rate tomes. . . . Ran into the Dudley Field Malones. . . . Edna Johnson? . . . She's so pretty. . . . Don't you ever notice when a girl has a new hat or anything?

Lefty Flynn, who just married and who punched a news photographer for taking their wedding photo, dislikes publicity. . . . Oh, does he? . . . Well, what I started out to tell you, my master, is that he's a grand guy, anyhow. . . . His idea of a tip when he is feeling merry in a hotel room (so his friends assert) is to fill a dresser drawer full of $2 bills. . . . Then he invites all the bellhops up to help themselves. Just to see the battle. . . . Saw Paul Block, Joseph M. Schenck and Mr. Ziegfeld in their ice cream suits yesterday. . . . Those Palm Beach suits reminded me of Will Rogers's crack: "I'd like to see a man they fit!"

Plays, Players and By-Play

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

A bulleting from the office of the Professional Players in the Alvin states that Irene Bordoni, not Yvonne Arnaud, will play the lead role in "The Improper Duchess," which is all right with us. We ain't a bit mad at Irene. The P. P. had announced previously that Miss Arnaud, who had played the role in London, would come to the U. S. A. to show the improprieties of this duchess, as recorded by the playwrighting pen of Mr. James Bernard Fagan. We shouldn't be a bit surprised but Miss Bordoni, who is well known and popular, will prove more acceptable to audiences than the unknown Miss Arnaud, so it shouldn't be much of a task to beat up under news of the change.

* * *

Dave Schooler, who is "mastering" in the Penn, says he played a horse for $25 one day and it was sold the next day for $10 to the butcher.

"Dirigible," which was "road-showed" in the Pitt a couple of months ago, will open in the Warner at a Sunday midnight screening. Jack Holt, Ralph Graves and Fay Wray and a big airship are the center of interest in this film, which was made with the co-operation of the aeronautical branch of the U. S. Navy.

'Night Nurse' Stanley's Film

By MILDRED FILLMORE

"Night Nurse," based on the novel of the same title, is the diverting film in the Stanley. It mixes hospitals and bootlegging, which one is apt to believe is a rather crazy mixture, but the entertainment value is there despite the unharmony of some of the factors of the tale. We understand the novel is a story that has some horror elements. What grimness remains in the film version is lightened by plenty of comedy, which, however, does not interfere with the dramatic development, marked by a tense climax.

Barbara Stanwyck is entitled to applause for her nice work in the title role, which is accentuated in her attendance upon two children suffering from intentional neglect and lack of proper diet.

CRUX OF STORY

The story hinges upon this situation and involves a shady doctor as well as a brutal chauffeur in the employ of the mother of the children. A bootlegger—no less than Ben Lyon—helps Miss Stanwyck to save the day.

Lyon, too, helps to give life to the comedy situations, but the greatest credit in this direction goes to Joan Blondell, as a wise-cracking nurse. Clarke Gable is the absolute in realism as the brutal chauffeur. Charles Winninger, Ralf Harolde and Blanche Frederici also portray strongly drawn character parts.

STAGE GOES FRENCH

The Stanley stage goes French in name at least, with the presentation of "On Ze Boulevard," Johnny Perkins, heralded as the Crown Prince of Jazz, puts on an act that gets laughs. Dick Powell, back from a visit with the home folks, keeps the band under control and sings a song with a little personality girl. Three Negro dancers with some hot stepping win applause. Other entertainers include a dancing chorus.

An organlogue by Bernie Armstrong and overture directed by David Broudy are on the bill.

Wymard Seeking County Judgeship

Attorney N. L. "Skippy" Wymard, of 250 South Homewood avenue, captain overseas in the World War in the 314th Infantry and member of the American Olympic committee to Stockholm in 1921, was erroneously reported yesterday as being a candidate for judge of Common Pleas Court. He is running for judge of County Court.

Who Will Wear Peggy's Bracelet When U.S. Gets It?

By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

When she gives it to the government, it's more than news.

Seems that Peggy squirred a federal rap by tossing off a twelve-thousand-dollar wristwarmer to the revenue department.

This is the same bracelet Peg forgot to declare at customs. She said she didn't know she had it. She's right. She ain't got it now.

Which one of the government officials is entitled to wear it? Andy Mellon is head man, but we don't think Andy would like to point at his wrist and simper: "I got it from Peggy."

There is no chance of it disappearing, now that the Democrats know the Republicans have it.

It's one of those things that will be passed along with each administration. And Peggy won't miss the diamond quoit much. She's got so many left she can't bend her elbow.

All In A Day

By Mark Hellinger

The Tragic Story of Mrs. Mooney

A COUPLE of years ago Mrs. Mooney picked up a newspaper and turned to a column she always read. Modesty forbids me to mention the author of the column, so I will say nothing about myself at this point. At any rate, she began to read. And as she read an idea came to her.

That column dealt with one of the oldest of the old-time insurance rackets. A saloonkeeper would pick out the shabbiest bar flies he could find and insure their lives for as much as possible. He would pay the initial premium and then feed the poor stews all the liquor they could consume. The initial payment was usually all that was required. Because, after several months of plenty of liquor for nothing, the insured men were dead and the saloonkeeper was that much richer.

Mrs. Mooney put down the paper and wagged her dome like a doggie. This, she felt, was an excellent thought for her business. And the more she thought, the better she liked it.

She was the owner of a speakeasy on Eleventh avenue — and what a joint it was! Her home-made whisky went for one dollar a pint, and for the big shots who patronized the bar, 20 cents a large shot.

Naturally there was a Mr. Mooney. Without a Mr. Mooney a Mrs. Mooney wouldn't have much to talk about. But it had been a long time since Mr. Mooney had had anything to say about the manner in which the Mooney household should run.

As far as Mrs. Mooney was concerned, everything was strictly business. Any time her husband wanted a drink he had to lay his money on the line. He was treated exactly the same as any other customer. And inasmuch as there wasn't an hour of the day that Mr. Mooney didn't want a drink, you can readily see that he was one of his wife's best patrons.

The husband, incidentally, was a truck driver. By judicious inquiry into the Einstein theory, he had learned that by working one week he could make enough to drink for two or three weeks. He was now waiting for a new Einstein or a new theory that would do away with that one week's work.

Such was the state of affairs in the Mooney menage when Mrs. Mooney read the column about insuring an elderly souse and plying him with drinks. . . .

That same afternoon she found her man Snooky was his name and he'd been hanging around the neighborhood for years. He went in for odd chores and any minor work that would bring him the price of a drink.

It didn't take Mrs. Mooney long to reach a very satisfactory business arrangement with Snooky. She would take out a pretty policy on his life with herself, of course, as the beneficiary. In return, Snooky could have all the liquor he wanted absolutely free of charge—provided, also, that he did all the odd chores around the saloon. Leave it to Mrs. Mooney to get a share more than the bargain called for.

Within a week, everything was running smoothly. A kindly insurance doctor okayed the policy without seeing the patient because he saw a $50 note instead. I guess it was just as well, however, for the $50 note was much prettier than Snooky could ever hope to be.

You can readily understand that, as far as Snooky was concerned, Mrs. Mooney was the very soul of generosity. In the morning she insisted that Snooky have a bottle to fix him up from the effects of the night before. In the afternoon she pressed a bottle upon him in order that he might do his work better. And at night she wouldn't dream of letting him retire without a bottle for a nightcap.

To Snooky this must have seemed like the promised land. True, his old friends were dropping off one by one from the results of too much bad liquor. But that didn't seem to worry him any. He just accepted his bottle with a smile and a word of thanks to Mrs. Mooney.

"You've been the very soul of kndness," he assured his benefactress. "It sure is great of you to brighten up the last days of a poor old man like myself."

Mrs. Mooney was right on hand with the soft soap.

"Now, now, Snooky," she told him, "that's been the way with me ever since I was no bigger than a mite. What's the good of living, I say, if you can't do something for them that needs it? Will you have another bottle, Snooky?"

To make matters just that much more cheerful, her husband provided Mrs. Mooney with the shock of her life. He almost stopped drinking! No longer did he sit around the saloon all day. No longer did he slap his 20 cents on the bar with unceasing regularity. True, he did no more work than usual. But he told his wife he had taken to walking through the park. A man of his years, he said, must have more fresh air and exercise.

Mrs. Mooney was rather proud about that. After all, this man had been with her a long time and there must have been some sense of devotion to him deep down in her heart. That he was getting smarter with the years gave her a little satisfaction. Besides, it gave her something new to talk about. . . .

A year passed and another premium on Snooky's policy became due. Mrs. Mooney paid it—but not without a trace of annoyance. Snooky looked just as unhealthy as he had when she entered her arrangement with him, but no more so. She pressed more bottles upon him and wondered how long he could hold out before she cashed out when he cashed in.

A few more months and Mr. Mooney was suddenly taken ill. They rushed him to a hospital, where the doctors didn't require many instruments to determine that he was dying of acute alcoholism.

Mrs. Mooney was amazed. As soon as she heard the news she ran from the hospital and dashed toward her saloon. Snooks was the man to see about this. She'd soon find out from Snooky whether Mr. Mooney had been stealing any of her liquor.

"Can you imagine that man of mine?" she muttered as she ran. "Him tellin' me he wasn't drinkin' and windin' up in a hospital due to alcoholism. I pray he don't die. But if he gets better, I'll kill him."

When she reached the saloon she was further amazed. Snooky was gone. Vanished into thin air from the thick, as it were. And the only thing he had left was a note.

Mrs. Mooney read that note through blinking eyes. Snooky had gone, it seems, to the country where he could take life easy. He was very sorry for feeling as well as he did, and he greatly feared that Mrs. Mooney would have to continue paying his premiums for some time to come.

"You see, Mrs. Mooney," he wound up apologetically, "I grew a little worried when I saw all my old friends dying from liquor. So I made a bargain with Mr. Mooney and sold him all the bottles you gave me at half price." . . .

Mr. Wheeler Sheridan Star

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

Bert Wheeler, generally associated with Robert Woolsey, again steps out on his movie lonesome in "Too Many Cooks," romantic comedy film, which opened yesterday in the Sheridan Square. And it can be said that he isn't so bad in a solo talk. Of course, he really isn't alone. There is Dorothy Lee, petite and cute, to teach him what romance really means. Also there is Roscoe Ates, who is a personification of the fine art of stuttering.

The story of "Too Many Cooks" concerns a young couple who build a house to the tune of advice from about 13 relatives. At times it seems like there are more in-laws than there are extras in Hollywood. But it all fades out into the happy climax.

The young couple build their house about 50 miles out of New York, where there is plenty of fresh air, especially in the winter, according to Mr. Ates. This Mr. Ates operates a one-horse taxicab that carries the army of relatives to and from the scene of the building operations. And he has a stutter for every beat of the horse's hooves.

The title sounds like a spree of chefs. But it isn't. It refers to the girl's family. Well, she isn't the first person to have too many relatives.

Grounds Laid for Advance When Definite Turn Comes; Cable Department Lagging

NEW YORK, July 25.—Any improvement in general business in the next six months, coupled with the fact that there is a seasonal upturn in some departments of the International Telephone and Telegraph Company in that period, would enable the company to cover $2 dividend requirements for 1931. Earnings for the first half year probably were about 88 cents a share on the 6,642,508 shares outstanding at end of first quarter, or 12 cents a share less than dividend requirements for the six months. Company showed 43 cents a share earned for the first quarter.

It is the cable business which is suffering most in the communications field; the telephone is suffering least. Postal Telegraph is holding its own somewhat above the low ebb of the year. The drive for additional business has borne fruit and has laid grounds for improvement when business definitely turns upward.

DOING WELL IN SPAIN

The cable business, particularly that with South America, is poor as a result of the falling off in the export business.

Despite political disturbances in Spain, the company's Spanish subsidiary is doing well, and the 6 per cent dividend on the common shares is being earned. April and May showed good returns, and there is nothing to indicate that June figures will not be satisfactory. As a matter of fact, political disturbances rarely affect the traffic returns of the communications business, and often enough telephone and telegraph business increases, at least for a period.

UNIFYING PROPERTY

The company does not expect any falling off in earnings of the Spanish subsidiary, and rather looks for a normal expansion of the telephone business in that country.

Radio business also is increasing satisfactorily in many centers.

International Telephone and Telegraph properties continue in good shape. The company has spent the last year in unifying its vast interests, and has put into effect the most rigid economies in every department. Personnel and equipment has been cut where duplications occurred, and everything is in shape to take advantage of any improvement that may occur in general business.

National Biscuit Profit Better Than Bearish Predictions

Earnings of National Biscuit for the first half of this year, amounting to $1.36 a share, were better than some of the bearish predictions made a few weeks ago, when the stock was under pressure. At that time, considerable talk was heard of a sharp decline in the sales of the higher grade products of the company, and it was contended that this would be reflected in the results for the six months. In the corresponding period last year, $1.48 a share was reported.

Rumors are in circulation that Drug, Inc., is planning further expansion through the acquisition of additional properties. Wall street, ever ready to anticipate what might happen, is talking of the advantages the company would realize by obtaining American Home Products and Lambert. Nothing official has been announced on the subject, but the rumors are being repeated in many quarters.

While bank stocks are influenced to a considerable degree by the action of other securities, evidence has been seen recently of better buying in some of the leading bank shares. This demand is of the long pull variety. Some of the purchasers have announced their intention of maintaining their long positions for months on the theory that when securities come into favor again, bank stocks will be among the leaders in public favor.

Tire companies this year naturally were affected by the reduction in automobile output. Some interests, however, express the opinion that the increase in replacement sales this year may more than offset the decline in the original equipment business. Goodyear is one of the leaders in this field, and should reflect any improvement in the automobile industry. Scale buying has been reported in the stock on several occasions recently.

Active consideration of a merger of Sears-Roebuck and Montgomery Ward is vouched for in some market circles. The action of the two stocks at times recently has indicated that good support was coming into the issues on minor recessions. The belief prevails that this buying is based on anticipations of a combination of the two companies. The opinion is that no opposition would come from federal authorities to such a proposition.

Commodity prices will be important factors in the future. Some have expressed the opinion that there might be some improvement later on in the leading products, but economists contend that any increase in prices will be due to technical conditions within the individual markets and not to fundamentals. Because of the world-wide depression which has existed for such a long time, it is argued that not much improvement in commodity prices should be looked for in the near future.

Stocks Decline — Stocks Ease

MARKET EASES MODERATELY AT START

Offerings at Opening in Small Volume—Prices Steady Some—Steel Sags

NEW YORK, July 25.—(AP.) Stocks eased moderately in quiet trading today. Offerings at the opening were in small volume, and prices steadied a little after nominal declines had been recorded by principal shares.

Pressure against U. S. Steel lightened and the stock rose only about half a point in common with New York Central and American Can. American Tobacco, Telephone, National Biscuit, Safeway Stores, Westinghouse and Allied Chemical slipped off a point or slightly more.

The attention of the financial community was directed toward sterling exchange, which firmed against both the dollar and the French franc. Private advices from Paris to banking circles here said sterling had closed strong there, making further gold shipments to the French capital unprofitable. London cables here opened at 34.85 9-16 up ⅛.

Weekend mercantile reviews said business was drifting along under seasonal influences, able to hold a fairly even pace. Steel operators in the Youngstown district are expected to show a gain next week.

STRONGER TONE IN STERLING

NEW YORK, July 25.—Lazard Freres & Co. has received a cable from Paris stating that sterling against francs closed in Paris strong, removing further imports of gold from London unprofitable.

LONDON, July 25.—The Bank of England today did not change its rate for discount of sterling, which remains at 2½ per cent. The bank's weekly statement of the condition of the bank's metal reserves in relation to the note issue showed signs of improvement.

BERLIN, July 25.—The end-of-July settlement on the Boerse has been postponed to the end of August. The carryover money rate for August has been fixed at 12 per cent.

Danat Bank Likely To Remain Open

BERLIN, July 25.—The first investigation of Darmstaedter Und National Bank indicates that assets considerably surpass liabilities. On the basis of stock quotations of July 11, reserves were sufficient to cover losses; therefore, it is probable that the bank will continue to operate later on as an independent institution.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND VIEWS

TRANSPORTATION SURVEY

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States will make a study of new transportation developments and changes and put forward proposals for better co-ordination of such agencies in the public interest. This topic is one of several subjects which the chamber, representing 1,800 organized business bodies and representing nearly a million business men, has listed for consideration. The changing relationships between the carriers call for a reappraisal of the part that each should play in the future development of our national transportation system, the chamber believes, as well as for a re-examination of the type and extent of public regulation, in so far as regulation is needed to assure the most effective and economical service in the interest of both shippers and carriers. No date has been set for the study.

FALL RUG BUYING

Buyer attendance at the August 3 opening of fall rug and carpet lines will run from 25 to 40 per cent above the total at the opening on June 1, trade observers believe. Anticipating a heavy attendance of buyers, manufacturers who opened their fall lines last month have added new numbers to attract orders.

BEAUTY WINNER DISAPPEARS

The Missing Persons Bureau has been asked to find Dorothy Sharrock, 17, by her sister, Mrs. Mary Faueds, of 148 East Third avenue, Homestead. She said Dorothy was twice a beauty prize winner, once in Detroit and last year in Homestead. She is a professional acrobatic dancer, and Mrs. Faueds says is ambitious to go on the stage or into the movies.

Miss Sharrock

During the stay of Ziegfeld Follies here, her sister said she came to Pittsburgh in an unsuccessful attempt to obtain a position with the production. Soon after the Follies left, she said, her sister disappeared.

She was last seen June 24, when she wore a green dress, white coat, tan hat and black shoes. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighs 125 pounds, and has dark brown hair. Mrs. Faueds thinks she has gone to New York to renew her efforts to get into the Follies.

She says she is a good dancer and quit high school to follow it professionally. Dorothy is the fiancee of a son of a Homestead councilman, Mrs. Faueds told the police.

WOMAN, MONEY LOST, MISSING

Believed by relatives to have wandered away while brooding over the loss of $4,000 in a Hollywood (Cal.) bank that recently closed its doors, the Missing Persons Bureau has been asked to find Mrs. Mary Crowe, 65. Her son, A. J. Cox of 7428 Perrysville avenue, Ben Avon, with whom she has been making her home since she left Los Angeles in 1929, told police his mother owned considerable property in the Hollywood movie colony and had stock in the Edison Light Company there.

Mrs. Crowe

Since she came here, he said, she had been practicing her profession as a nurse and at the time of her disappearance Thursday morning she was engaged at the home of W. E. Wassum, 111 Castle Shannon road, whose wife is ill.

She was last seen at 6 a. m. Thursday, when she left the sickroom after relieving the other nurse four hours before. She wore a dark brown dotted swiss dress, no hat or coat, and had no purse or money. She is 5 feet 7 inches in height and has gray hair.

SEEK TO LIMIT STREET WIDTHS

Restriction of street widths in new projects in residential sections has been instituted by the city Public Works Department, according to Director Edward G. Lang.

The policy, money saving and not at all restrictive to traffic, obviates unnecessary and unwarranted filling, grading and retaining walls. This reduces the cost of the projects to abutting property owners.

Lang pointed out that a nine-foot clearance for automobile traffic each way is all that is required on residential streets. Ordinarily a 22-foot street for two-way traffic will be laid on new jobs. Any width over that amount up to 28 feet is unnecessary unless a three-lane width is desired.

The new policy is being carried out on Wilkesboro avenue, residence of Lang. A 30-foot roadway was first requested by property owners, but later the 22-foot width was substituted.

Youth Recovers From Paralysis Closing Eyes

BALTIMORE, July 25.—(AP)—Nineteen-year-old George Smith's eyelids once more are functioning normally, the paralysis which had affected them Thursday night having disappeared.

Officials at Mercy Hospital, where he was taken for treatment, said a passing nervous derangement had made it impossible for the youth to open his eyes. His mother thought it might be the result of a severe blow he had received over the eyes while playing several years ago.

Smith discovered he could not open his eyes when he was visiting a relative and had to grope his way when he went into another room for a drink of water.

GOLDEN EAGLE SHOT HERE

A golden eagle, a rare bird in this part of the country, was shot and killed by a Frazer Township farmer yesterday when the American bird tried to carry off a large shepherd dog.

The bird clawed the dog, and was about to take flight when a short distance from the ground the dog dropped due to its weight.

As the farmer went into the house to get his shotgun the eagle circled the farm, swooped down and carried a chicken into a tree. The farmer killed the bird with one shot.

The bird was turned over to a taxidermist, and when stuffed will be used for educational purposes by the State Game Commission. The eagle is a protected bird.

According to State Game Protector Ralph A. Liphart, who will be in charge of the bird, the wing-spread of the eagle is close to 73 inches. The bird is found in the Rocky Mountain region.

BELLE BAKER TONIGHT :-: Honegger's 'Pacific 231' Puffs Radio Rails

We Now Present

By Darrell V. Martin
Radio Editor

BELLE BAKER competes with Honegger's "symphonic locomotive" Pacific 231 for the 9:30 audience tonight.

Darrell V. Martin

Belle sings on WCAE at the same hour that William van Hoogstraten coaxes locomotive noises from the high-toned New York Philharmonic on WJAS. "Pacific 231" was performed first only seven years ago. Honegger, the composer, professes a love for locomotives comparable to other men's love for horses . . . the escape of steam, the labored starting of the gigantic engine, the cumulative drive of the pistons and finally the dynamic force of the train being subdued by brakes, are all simulated by orchestra instruments without the aid of any sound effects.

Fred Webber, WCAE announcer, and Bill Bohrer, operator, were injured slightly yesterday when an automobile driven by Fred was struck by another automobile in West Liberty avenue and the usual tough luck was with Fred—the other man had no insurance.

Gene and Glenn pack their bags tomorrow night and hie to Glen Lake, Mich., for two weeks vacation . . . their network broadcasts are to be handled by "Lum and Abner," hill billy farmers from Arkansas.

Question a Day:

Do radio stations have any choice in the selection of call letters?—Irene Price, Oakland.

Answer—While the Radio Commission endeavors as much as possible to keep call letters in alphabetical order, stations are permitted to submit a list of call letters they would prefer. Calls forming words and difficult to pronounce have little chance of being okayed by the commission.

THE LOUDSPEAKER

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, July 25.—As radio has attracted but few first-rank actors, so it has attracted but few established novelists. They say there is not enough money in it yet.

But there will be some day. Within five years, our crystal ball tells us. Then radio will compare in financial opportunity with the scenario salons of Hollywood. Once Hollywood could not pay enough money to lure the leaders of the literati. Today the leaders have assembled there is mass formation.

Radio, like the movies, has its own technique. And it will continue, while signing well-known literary names, to develop its own writers. Already it has developed several. Gertrude Berg, Phillips Lord, Gosden and Correll, Peter Dixon, Burke Boyce, Finis Farr. All of these have labored long in the broadcasting vineyards, turning out material for the microphone. All of them have reached the top of the heap.

* * *

Among the better known writing names, only J. P. McEvoy is consistently turning out successful radio features. Radio has yet to inspire George Ade, Ring Lardner, Julian Street, Harris Dickson, G. P. Wodehouse, F. Scott Fitzgerald. Nor has it appealed as yet to any of the established Broadway playwrights. But it will come to it. Some day its caliphs will find it necessary to pay proportionately as high for writing talent as they now pay for entertainers.

Nicola Tesla, wizard of wireless, was 75 years old last week. But no word of congratulations came out of the radio world. The broadcasters paid no heed. Yet, 32 years ago Tesla sent out wireless waves antedating, he claims, even Marconi. Marconi, however, is secure on the throne chairs of the broadcasters. In addition to his worthy accomplishments he knows how to dramatize himself.

ROUND TABLE OF BUSINESS

STEEL OUTPUT TO BE LOWER NEXT WEEK

Belief Universal That Upturn in September Will Be Pronounced

By B. F. FITZ

Last week's steel ingot producing rate of about 32 per cent was barely sustained this week and from present prospects the chances are there will be a slight decline next week. This month as a whole will hardly average 32 per cent, and there is doubt whether next month will do much better as well since a few large users plan for line pipe are to be completed.

Belief is universal that seasonal upturn will be more marked than usual, beginning in the first half of September, somewhat late and therefore more pronounced. The peak producing rate is generally guessed at between 45 and 50 per cent. There might easily be a higher rate through autumn demand being concentrated covering a shorter period than usual.

IMPROVED OUTLOOK

None of the steel consuming lines gives indication of having larger steel requirements next month than this but some special lines should be more active after August and general miscellaneous demand should be decidedly heavier. Improved sentiment due to at least partial clearing up of Europe's troubles is counted on to make buyers less haggardly as to the size of their individual orders.

The steel price situation is rather complicated. In bars, plates and shapes the ambition is to stabilize the market on the basis of 1.60c Pittsburgh, which means reduction on the relatively small tonnage that was going at the 1.65c asking price while later buyers of plates and shapes are to be pulled up perhaps half to the full 1.60c, but this is differential in line with conditions. Sheets the advanced asking price of 1.75c of just a year holding but as buyers had opportunity to cover for this month there is thus far no crucial test.

DETROIT PRICE UP

Detroit seems to be set up as a separate basing point on bars with 1.75c quoted against the 1.60c Pittsburgh price. Freight Pittsburgh to Detroit is $5.30 per net ton and as freights out of Detroit are small and much trucking is done there is a saving to buyers in that area. There are chances that eventually sheets also will have a Detroit basing. Taking steel as a whole however there has lately been little price change of moment and little is to be expected in the next few months either upward or downward not enough to affect steel company earnings materially as the big thing is the volume.

The Pittsburgh district market on heavy melting steel scrap has advanced fully 25 cents to a range of $10.50 to $11, making 75 cents from the low point a month ago while Eastern Pennsylvania, Youngstown and Cleveland have also advanced all on account of light outcome and heavier requirements.

Damaged Freight Cars Show Drop

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Class I railroads on July 1 had 172,356 freight cars in need of repairs or 7.9 per cent of the number on line according to the American Railway Association. This was a decrease of 29 below June 15, when there were 172,805 or 7.8 per cent.

Class I railroads on July 1 had 3,938 locomotives in need of repairs or 10.9 per cent of the number on line according to the American Railway Association. This was a decrease of 139 locomotives below June 15 at which time there were 4,077 or 11.2 per cent.

National Aviation Seeking Federal

Speaker

KARL M. MAUKERT

STRESSES NEED OF EDUCATION

Karl M. Maukert, a member of the executive board of Duffs Iron City College, invites addresses at graduation of eight people last graduated from high school. He made a strong plea for [illegible] education and [illegible] especially specialized [illegible] for business. Mr. Maukert said in part:

"We have been going through a period of economic depression. Our experiences have demonstrated beyond argument that in times of stress he who is best trained suffers last and least. It has also proved that with the return of prosperity the man or woman with a specialized education is benefitted first and most.

"Now that the entire country is on the upgrade, thoughtful forward-looking young men and young women will prepare to enjoy a full share of the benefits that prosperity always brings.

"No one need be reminded that this a very practical age, and that only practical education will meet present requirements. To succeed in business one must have power—and only education gives power. The keen, intelligent competition that prevails in every department of our business and industrial life can be met successfully only with keenness and intelligence.

"Certainly it is fair to say that young people who permit their school days to pass unused are sure in later years to suffer the very severe penalty that ignorance always imposes."

Chrysler Holds Interest Of Automobile Industry

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

SHARP IMPROVEMENT in earnings and a favorable reception of mechanical improvements to cars has made the Chrysler Corporation the center of interest in the automobile industry.

In the second quarter of the present year Chrysler put its operations on a profitable basis and reported earnings in excess of dividend requirements.

Public interest in Plymouth cars, Chrysler's low priced line, is resulting in record production in this department. The development of a new system for eliminating vibration has made Plymouth sales one of the few bright spots in the automobile industry.

An upturn in earnings in the second quarter was to be expected as a result of seasonal conditions but the extent of the improvement indicates that more efficient operation played an important part. The advent of the new Plymouth model has been too recent for it to have affected second quarter earnings. If the popularity of this car continues it will be an important factor in maintaining Chrysler earnings during the balance of the year.

Mr. Chrysler

Earned 73 Cents a Share

NET PROFIT FOR THE SECOND quarter amounted to $3,231,962 or 73 cents a share. This was approximately equal to net for the corresponding period of last year in spite of a decrease of 23 per cent in the organization's dollar sales volume. In the first quarter a loss of $979,927 was reported.

The loss in the first quarter brought net for the six months ended June 30 down to 51 cents a share which was one cent more than the dividend requirements for the period. In the first half of 1930, 77 cents a share was earned. Chrysler stock is on a $1 annual dividend basis.

In commenting on the statement, Walter P. Chrysler, president, pointed to an increase of $10,187,023 in current assets and a reduction of $3,293,199 in inventories since the beginning of the year. Inventories on June 30 were $12,936,000 less than a year ago.

Chrysler's Record

SOME AUTOMOBILE men believe that the method of mounting the motor in the Plymouth may prove to be a revolutionary development. It promises to make the economies of the four cylinder car available without the noise and vibration which were objectionable features in the past.

Chrysler has a unique record. He revived the moribund Maxwell Motor Company in 1925 and built it up to be one of the leading companies in the industry. Since the merger with Dodge three years ago, the Chrysler Corporation has been a disappointment to investors. The developments of the next few months may indicate whether or not Chrysler has another "miracle" under way.

SHIP BUILDING AT LOW EBB

WASHINGTON, July 25.—A gain of 70,000 gross tons in the United States total was the outstanding exception to a general decline in the volume of merchant ships under construction in the principal shipbuilding countries of the world during the second quarter of the current year as compared with the first quarter according to an analysis of world shipping figures in the commerce department's transportation division.

Total gross tonnage under construction during the second quarter in all countries except Russia, for which figures are not available, amounted to 1,826,000 tons, in comparison with approximately 2,000,000 tons in the first quarter and 2,058,000 tons in the corresponding period of last year, according to figures compiled by Lloyd's Register of Shipping.

Ships under construction in the United States during the second quarter totaled 301,489 gross tons, an advance of 70,000 gross tons over the first quarter and of 63,000 tons over the total for the corresponding quarter of 1930, bringing the country's figure to a higher point than at any time since the war-building boom.

U. S. Radio Exports Show 57% Increase

WASHINGTON, July 25.—A 57 per cent gain in exports from United States of radio receiving sets was registered for the first five months of 1931 over the corresponding period of the previous year. Radio receiving sets exported during May were valued at $1,171,000 against $726,000 in May 1930, a gain of more than 60 per cent.

For the five months period the total was $5,191,483 against $3,212,100 for the like 1930 period.

GLASS TRADE STILL SLOW

Nothing has developed in the past week to break the summer dullness in demand and production in the flat glass industry according to American Glass Review. Orders have slowed up in number and quantity and manufacturers expect no marked activity until the vacation season is over.

Prices remain fairly stable at the lowest level in years. Production is down in those few factories operating and there is no indication of any great improvement until late in August. One observer believes that window glass production this year will be the lowest in more than 35 years and smiles reminiscently when reminded of the chaotic conditions 20 years ago declaring that the producers of 1911 never realized how bad things could get.

SOME LEADERS ADJUSTED TO CONDITIONS

Well-Managed Companies' Second Quarter Profits For '31 Better Than '30

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service

NEW YORK, July 25.—Although economic conditions continue distinctly subnormal, executives of some of the outstanding corporations are at length thoroughly adjusted to prevailing conditions, and are therefore able to report some improvement in profits.

General Motors and a few other well-managed companies reported better profits for the second quarter of 1931 than for the corresponding period in 1930. Henceforth, corporations will be comparing results with a period of maximum depression in 1930. Accordingly, there will be less shock in making comparisons of results for the second half of the current year.

Mr. Rukeyser

REPORTS BETTER

Though the quantity of statements on business conditions by executives has declined in recent months the quality has improved. Owen D. Young, Julius H. Barnes, James A. Farrell and Daniel Willard are among those who have offered thought-provoking remarks based on penetrating analysis and a genuine understanding of our economic difficulties.

In connection with international collaboration at London to bring about better conditions in Germany, the remarks of Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, about the international aspects of business are timely.

SANER ATTITUDE

He said:

"We must bear in mind that our situation is world-wide. The suffering and ill effects of the war have been international. There has been a tendency for nations to be hysterical in erecting economic barriers. I am happy to say that there is evidence of a more sane attitude, a growing ability to recognize that trade between nations can flourish only on a basis of mutual advantage.

"One of the constructive results of the present period has been a sharper scrutiny of uneconomic barriers and a better understanding of the essentials of trade relationships. We are trying to learn common sense at home, and we have got to apply it in trading with our neighbors, too."

Aluminum Company To Close Factory

The Aluminum Company of America plans to suspend temporarily its Niagara Falls operations about August 1. No immediate plans have been made for the resumption of these operations but it is hoped that business conditions will warrant opening up in a short time.

LOCAL RETAIL TRADE HOLDS UP WELL

Hot Weather Continues To Stimulate Demand For Summer Apparel

Retail trade is holding up fairly well for this season of the year, warm weather continuing to stimulate demand for summer merchandise, according to R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review. Demand for women's wearing apparel is particularly active. Jobbers report buying largely for filling-in purposes, with future orders still light. There has been a moderate increase in hardware lines, with electrical merchandise also in slightly stronger demand.

Production and distribution of both plate and window glass continues at a low rate, but it is reported that stocks of both manufacturers and distributors continue comparatively small. Prices seem to be stabilized at the recent lows. Industrial operations of other lines show little change, although a better feeling appears to be prevailing among manufacturers.

Production of crude oil has shown a sharp decrease, while prices paid to producers are showing more firmness. The situation in the bituminous coal fields show little change, the strike still continuing but production appears to be ample for current requirements, which are light. Prices show no material change and continue unsatisfactory to producers.

Collections continue to average slow with jobbers as well as with installment houses.

CANADA'S GOLD YIELD MOUNTS

WASHINGTON, July 25.—With a new high record for gold production during 1930, Canada is now running neck-and-neck with the United States for second place among the world's gold producing countries, according to figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics received in the commerce department's minerals division.

Final revised Canadian figures forwarded to the department by Consul Jesse B. Jackson at Fort William, Ontario, indicate that the record output during the past year amounted to 2,012,068 fine ounces of gold. Gold production in the United States during 1930, according to preliminary figures, amounted to 2,232,593 fine ounces a slightly higher total than the Canadian and the second largest in the world.

The stretch reconstructed is 0.54 mile long, 36 feet wide for a distance of 200 feet, and 27 feet wide the remainder of the length. It is a reinforced concrete pavement 10 inches in thickness with raised concrete curbs.
The contract was awarded to Paris Brothers on September 23, 1930, the contract price being $52,294.60. It will be completed this year.
The source of county funds was the 1928 Peoples Bond Issue.

Know Your City

Pittsburgh was incorporated as a Borough in 1794 with a population of less than 500 and an area of less than one half square mile.
Today the city ranks fifth in population among Metropolitan districts, with an area of only 54.37 square miles in the corporate limits as against 139 square miles in Detroit and 442 square miles in Los Angeles.
Allegheny County—the real Pittsburgh—has 122 independent municipalities besides Pittsburgh, with a total population of over 1,374,606.
No other city in the United States, except Boston, has as large a proportion of unannexed population as Pittsburgh. In recognition of this situation the voters of Pennsylvania have adopted an amendment to the State Constitution to create a consolidated city of which all the existing 123 municipal governments shall become parts, thus making Pittsburgh a city of 1,400,000 population, outranking Detroit and Los Angeles and following Philadelphia.

A. A. Stagg, Jess Harper and Hunk Anderson to Write Football for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph

A. A. STAGG

The weather hardly is suitable for football, but the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph today has an announcement of extraordinary importance to make to its readers with regard to its plans for the impending gridiron campaign.

For several seasons the articles of the members of the All-America Board of Football have been appearing exclusively in this newspaper in Pittsburgh. The recent tragic death of Knute Rockne, famous Notre Dame coach, has caused a change in the personnel of the board in keeping with the high caliber of that body up to this time.

The surviving members of the board are Glenn (Pop) Warner, former Pitt coach, representing the Pacific Coast; Tad Jones, representing the East, and Bill Alexander, representing the South. Jones is the former Yale coach, while Alexander is the mentor at Georgia Tech. Warner is at Stanford.

JESS HARPER

To take the place of Rockne, A. A. Stagg, for 40 years coach at the University of Chicago, has been signed. Jess Harper, who was Rockne's coach at Notre Dame and now is back as athletic director of the Irish, also will sit with the board in making its annual All-America team selection. Heartly (Hunk) Anderson, Rockne's successor as head coach at Notre Dame, also will write exclusively for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, through arrangement with the Christy Walsh Syndicate, while Howard Harpster, Carnegie Tech's most famous quarterback, an All-America player a few seasons ago and now head coach at Geneva College, will continue to contribute feature articles throughout the season.

Football still is many hot days away, but this announcement is made just to let our readers know that the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph is looking ahead in its usual enterprising fashion to the needs of another season.

FIRST RECEIVER TO STAY UNDER BAT

IN ADDITION TO being the only man who ever made seven hits in one major league ball game, which he did with six singles and a double in seven times at bat while playing for the old Baltimore Orioles against the St. Louis Nationals on June 10, 1892, Manager Wilbert Robinson, of the Brooklyn club, claims to have been the first catcher to remain up close behind the bat all the time his team was in the field, in the style of the present day.

Wilbert Robinson

The rule requiring the catcher to stay under the bat continuously was not adopted until 1901, the same year in which the foul-strike rule came in. Prior to that, the receivers would stand back near the grandstand and take the pitches on the bound, or let the ball be stopped by padded boarding, until the batter got on the bases or had two strikes or three balls called on him. Then the catcher would don his mask and windpad and crouch under the bat. He would remain there if the hitter reached base, but would doff mask and pad and go back to his former position near the grandstand if the batter struck out or was otherwise retired.

IN 1901 THE rule compelling the catcher to play under the bat throughout was adopted as a time saver, but Robbie recalls that he did not wait for the regulation. As star backstop of the Orioles, he introduced several years earlier the style of staying behind the bat, but he does not take the credit to himself. He says he was forced to do so by the hunting prowess of George Van Haltren, another star of the days when players wore handlebar mustaches.

"Van Haltren appeared to be the only batter to see the possibility of reaching first base by bunting when the catcher was stationed far back," said Robbie. "He became so skillful at bunting that he could almost lay the ball on the plate, so that neither the pitcher nor the catcher could get to it in time to throw him out. He pulled that on me so often after he left the Baltimore club in 1892 that I was finally forced to stay up behind the plate in self protection."

VAN HALTREN joined the Chicago Nationals in 1887 as a pitcher, but did not make good as a hurler and was converted into an outfielder. Later he played for Baltimore, Pittsburgh and New York. He batted .300 or better 12 times. Pittsburgh obtained him from Baltimore in September of 1892 with $2,000 in exchange for Joe Kelley and sold him to New York after the 1893 season for $2,500.

While with the Pirates in 1893, Van Haltren, in a game at old Exposition Park, made one of the most freakish wild throws on record. His peg from centerfield bounded squarely into a rat hole under the old wooden grandstand and enabled the visiting club to score the winning run.

THE PIRATES HAVE made a better record than any other club in the National League since they started on the upgrade again on July 14. They have won eight of their last 11 games, and no other aggregation has either scored as many victories or made as good a percentage during the same period. The Bucs in that time have gained three full games on the Braves and are now only four and a half has scores below fifth place. They are charged with only six defeats more than the Robins in second position.

THE PRESENT SERIES at Forbes Field has strengthened the opinion of local fans that the most dangerous two hitters coming together in one batting order in the National League, at least against right-hand pitching, and the closest approach to Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig in the American, are Babe Herman and Lefty O'Doul, of the Robins.

Babe Herman

All that this pair did yesterday was to make nine of Brooklyn's 21 hits. Herman tore off a home run, a triple, a double and a single, while O'Doul connected for four singles and a double. Five hits in five times up made O'Doul's great batting record for the western trip 33 hits in 51 times at bat in 17 games, an average of .647. His average for the season today was .343 and Herman's was .340.

O'DOUL IS THE thirteenth player in the majors to make five hits in one game this season. No rival has equaled the mark set by Wally Gilbert, Brooklyn third baseman, in the second game of the Memorial Day doubleheader against the Giants, when he made six hits in seven times at bat.

It takes more than hitting power to win ball games, as is evidenced by the fact that the Robins made a total of 38 hits in the last two contests here, yet lost both numbers. The Flatbush ballers put too much loose stuff on the bases to get the full value of their hits. In the second inning yesterday, for instance, they got two doubles, a single and a base on balls, yet failed to score.

IF ONE OF the other flag contenders in the National doesn't soon pick up some ground on the Cardinals, the latter may gain as commanding a lead as the A's hold in the American. The Robins offered some hope during the first part of their western trip, but have looked like anything except pennant threats in their series here so far. A double victory yesterday stretched the Cards' lead to eight games, only two short of the margin held by the Macks, and the latter edge is generally considered pretty safe. The Redbirds are gaining so steadily at home that an ordinary pace on their remaining trips may suffice to keep them from being dislodged.

MICKEY WALKER may do for drawing purposes in a heavyweight title match with Max Schmeling, if he whips Primo Carnera, as he probably will, and is allowed to dodge Tommy Loughran, who

ROLAND GARROS STADIUM, PARIS, July 25.—George P. Hughes and Charles Kingsley, of England, won the second set, 7-5, after losing the first set, 6-1, to Henri Cochet and Jacques Brugnon, of France, in their Davis Cup doubles tennis match here today.

AUTEUIL, France, July 25 (AP).—England's fighting young tennis team, which scored a surprise victory over the United States in the interzone final of Davis Cup play yesterday, carried its form into the challenge round to hold France even in the first two singles matches.

CRUCIAL MATCHES

Henri Cochet, world ranking tennis player, rose to old heights to defeat H. W. (Bunny) Austin, England's number one, 3-6, 11-9, 6-2, 6-4, but 21-year-old Fred Perry outfought Jean Borotra in five blazing sets, 4-6, 10-8, 6-0, 4-6, 6-4, to save the day.

The fate of the Davis Cup hinges on the result of today's doubles matches.

Perry is being held out of the doubles to give him every chance against the great Cochet.

Charles H. Kingsley, former Oxford captain, has been nominated to take Perry's place alongside George Hughes in the doubles today. Cochet will pair with Jacques Brugnon against them.

PRESIDENT ATTENDS

The Frenchmen were defeated at Wimbledon by George Lott, Jr., and John Van Ryn, who also defeated Perry and Hughes in the interzone final. Cochet has come on rapidly since that time.

HELEN BATTLES MRS. HARPER

MANCHESTER, Mass., July 25 (AP).—A steadiness gained from extensive competition here and abroad carried Mrs. Lawrence A. Harper, of Oakland, Cal., into the final round of the Essex County Club's invitation tennis tournament, and an all-Californian match with Mrs. Helen Wills Moody, whom she succeeded as the nation's top-ranked woman player. The title round is scheduled today.

EXPLANATION OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF YESTERDAY: THE LARGE MINNOWS OF UTAH—The Colorado River Salmon, or Ptychocheilus Lucious (Girard), is the largest of the minnow family found native to North America, the minnow family (Cyprinidae) being composed of more than 100 species throughout the globe. The Colorado River Salmon, also known as White Salmon or Whitefish, is found only in the Colorado River basin. The 26½-pound minnow, caught by George E. Thorne, of Vernal, Utah, is not a record specimen, as, according to Fred J. Foster, of the Bureau of Fisheries, Salt Lake City, 80-pounders measuring five feet have been taken from the Green River. They are the largest fish found in the state of Utah.

Each shot a 69, three under par, yesterday.

Four players tied for sixth place behind the leaders, each with a 70. They are Tony Manero, Elmsford, N. Y., Tommy Armour, Detroit, British open champion; Johnny Revolta, Chippewa Falls, N. Y., and Clarence Camber, Pontiac, Mich.

GIRLS COMPETE IN TITLE MEET

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 25.—(AP)—Feminine track and field candidates for the American 1932 Olympic team will disport themselves this afternoon at Pershing Field, where the National Amateur Athletic Union will hold its tenth annual track and field championships.

Contestants representing all parts of the country will make especially earnest bids for the 11 titles, because the winners will be given special consideration next spring when the trials for places on the Olympic squad will be held.

The 253 entries include all of the 1930 titleholders and eight members of the last Olympic team. The central states, New England and metropolitan district champions will compete.

The group from Texas, consisting of nine entries, is captained by Mildred (Babe) Didrikson, one of the present day greats who has been threatening Stella Walsh's lofty position in athletic circles.

The 100-yard dash will bring together some of the fastest speedsters in the country, including Mae Walsh.

Victors in eight of their 12 bouts with three seaboard enemies, the Pirates are all set today for a dual clash with Uncle Robbie's Brooklyn boys. The six-game setto is due to come to a close in the bargain attraction, the Freebooters having won three of the four battles so far staged.

The Robins gave the Bucons a terrible fight in the ninth round of yesterday's game. They had the bases packed with none out and only one run needed to deadlock when Larry French rushed to the scene to show the fans the greatest bit of emergency pitching on display at the Oakland Orchard this year. Larry kept the home dish unsullied and the Ens-

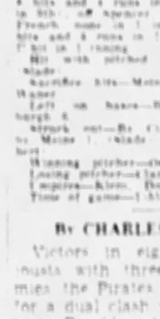
Says Nick Altrock

(Baseball's Comedian)

WASHINGTON, July 25.—You got to hand it to the Cardinals for their chain store baseball plan. The Cards have got branch ball clubs all over the land.



Nick Altrock

When anything goes wrong in St. Louis, they wire the Rochester club to ship a crate of medium sized infielders. Then Rochester tells the Podunk club to send over nine bushels of pinch hitters and 10 pounds of shortstop, and that's the way it goes.

The Cards have got the chain store baseball idea worked out so slick they are ready to merge with Sears-Roebuck any day now, and I hear they are going to paint their ball parks next year with red fronts.

"It's always fair weather" and men always are boys when they meet on a common ground like that of baseball. The popular John Picus Jack Quinn, veteran pitcher of the Brooklyn Robins, began his brilliant career around the Connellsville district. Indisputable proof of this fact was introduced when R. B. Barkell, of Scottdale, appeared at the Brooklyn dugout at Forbes Field with a scorebook containing the figures on games in which Quinn took part in 1904. Barkell, Bob Sterrett and O. H. Magee played with and against Jack in those days. "Jack fanned me three times in this game," mused Barkell, "and I realized I was no star."

Send Forth Friendliness And It Will Return

Why can't Bobby find any friends—

Or have any dates?

She isn't old or ugly or funny looking. And she has plenty of chances to meet 'em. But—

Dear Sally:

I am writing you to unburden a heavy heart, more than to ask for advice, because I am beyond the power to use advice if I had it.

NEVER HAD A DATE

This really is the story of a girl who has never really lived. I am 20 and honestly, I have never had more fun or excitement than a 10-year-old kid. I have an inferiority complex of some sort, and I believe it is realizing this sort that hurts the most. I wouldn't think of telling anyone else what I am telling you. They might pity me, and I just can't stand pity. Please don't pity me. I am so proud that I would rather do most anything than let people know they have the power to hurt me, but they sure do have it. I am as sensitive as a high-powered electric wire.

And can you believe it? I have never had a date in my life and wouldn't know how to act if I did have one. I do not even know any fellows to speak to, let alone to go out with. I know oodles of them just to see—schoolmates and neighbors, but I haven't even one for an acquaintance. Just think! I am almost a grown woman and I have never had a date! I have never been to a party. I can't dance, play cards, swim or skate. I suppose it sounds incredible, but it's the honest-to-God truth. You see, never knowing anyone intimately, I never had the chance to learn any of these things, and no one ever seemed overly anxious to teach me. But I could do without them. I think, if I only had even one friend to talk to and laugh with.

Please don't get me wrong. I am not boy crazy. I crave girl companionship, too, but it is terribly hard for me to get acquainted with people, and if I do, I have nothing of interest to them, to converse about. I speak to some, certainly, but not as a confidential friend, for no one is interested enough in dull me to bother to be very friendly. I don't blame them, of course. I realize it's my own fault, but neither can I help the way I am made.

GETS PANICKY

I have tried desperately to overcome these shortcomings of mine, but with heart-breaking results. I make up my mind to be friendly and nice to some fellow at my next opportunity . . . but when that time comes, I become embarrassed and panicky, and seem to lose the power of speech. As a result, they don't seem to know I exist.

I am not exactly homely. I try to dress nicely. So I don't thing looks has anything to do with my hermit state.

Am I abnormal, or just one of nature's fools? Can I help it if I was born without a scrap of self-confidence and with a bundle of self-consciousness that I was born to be stepped on?

May be you can tell me. What do you honestly think of me? Please help me if you can. And please don't pity me.

"BOBBY."

Indeed I won't pity you, kid! Why should I? Aren't you doing a swell job of it yourself? Besides, I have troubles of my own . . . and unless you're doing something to make life pleasanter for me, why should I bother about you?

Sounds hard-boiled, doesn't it? But it's the key to all your troubles and your aloneness, youngster. You've been so busy worrying about the way Bobby felt, that you had no time left to offer anything in exchange for the friendship you long for so desperately.

So I refuse to cry over Bobby and her blasted young life. I refuse to feed her conceit, her laziness, her cowardliness, her egotism. And I refuse to alibi her self-love, by calling it by any such high-sounding name as "inferiority complex." Or make such excuses for it as "I'm abnormal . . . one of Nature's fools . . . sensitive as a high-powered wire . . . born to be stepped on . . . no one ever taught me" . . . and so forth.

You can have friends just like any other girl or boy, if you'll stop lavishing all your love and thought on Bobby. If you'll stop trying to get something for nothing. Instead of crawling around, thinking what a poor, self-conscious martyr you are, sit down and do some honest thinking for a change.

SELF CENTERED

Ask yourself this: Why should people love a young woman who wants friends merely for her own sake.

So long as you go around thinking "Nobody Loves Poor Little Me," you'll say and do things that make people dislike you. If you honestly and genuinely like people, and believe that they like you . . . if you'll wonder what you can do to make things pleasanter for them, instead of what you can do to make them pleasanter for yourself . . . then you'll express likeable qualities all day long, and folks will respond to them. We get what we give in this world. If we send out genuine friendliness to people, it will return to us. Send selfishness and resentment, and it will return, too.

As a matter of fact, you've been avoiding contacts with people all your life. You've been afraid of people's opinions. You've been picturing unpleasant things being thought or said about you . . . all because you were centered in yourself.

Right about face! Change your thinking habits! Stop imagining you're the center of the universe. Realize the needs of others. Begin to see them as human . . . and lonely . . . just like yourself. Begin to wonder what you can give . . . and then you'll begin to get.

'JUST LIKE YOU, DARLING!'

Nell Brinkley

Lucky for the happiness of a great part of the world that Love is willingly, eagerly blind, an ecstatic perjurer! Lucky, too, that the movies flickered into being to set up their super, de luxely beautiful persons who SEEM to be us; ourselves gilded; moving through the same stories that we live, the stories magnified too, one way or another, to please or horrify us. Would we be a here? Only that way; through Love's deliberate blindness, or the extravagance of the screen, can we possibly be one! Would we dazzle our lover, be all in all, the pearl of beauty, the ruby of price, to him? Then Love puts a chubby hand before his eyes, we cuddle up against our lover (or husband, and yes! we know that he can be one and the same), and see ourselves in Greta Garbo.

"Darling!" breathes a lovely Jill to an indifferently handsome Jack whose nose, whose eyes, whose neck, whose chin, are nothing just right. "why look—he looks like YOU!" And Jack, being blonde and uncomely, looks upon the sullenly handsome face of a black-haired young gentleman with the nose of Apollo, an eye of Narcissus, a mouth of Napoleon, and the general mien of a haughty god, the newest planet in the moving-picture sky, and SEES THAT HE DOES INDEED! Everybody at the table is blind!

Due to Love, and the movies.

I wonder sometimes though, if Cupid himself, if he were a reality, would not be screwing his eyes shut, and holding them so, a fake blind man!

How to Keep Well

The Shock of a Cold Bath May Be Harmful

Dr. Copeland

In ancient Rome bathing was a luxury enjoyed by the rich. Modern civilization no longer considers it as a luxury, but as a necessity.

The popular idea about bathing has changed a lot since the days when Rome was in its grandeur. It has changed more even within the past half century.

At one time it was believed daily bathing was injurious to the health. This opinion undoubtedly arose because of some mere superstition or unsound advice. Even the doctors were opposed to frequent baths.

Just as it was advised to protect against night air, so did our grandparents warn against night bathing. In fact, it was believed by many that baths should only be taken upon certain days and at certain times. Perhaps this is how the customary Saturday night bath came into vogue.

Fortunately, modern plumbing, crowded environment and the substitution of knowledge for mere superstition, have changed our ideas covering baths. Careful study has taught the importance of daily cleansing of the body.

Since the body waste is carried off through the skin, bathing is most essential for good health. This is best accomplished by the liberal use of lukewarm water and plenty of soap. Cold baths are not as cleansing as warm baths. But soap is absolutely necessary for removing accumulated dirt from the skin.

In addition to cleansing the body, bathing may be considered as a stimulant and tonic. Following a strenuous day of work, a cleansing bath aids in toning up the body. It is stimulating upon arising in the morning and aids in getting rid of the cobwebs.

Nothing is more relaxing and comforting than a warm tub just before going to bed. This is a simple cure for many cases of insomnia.

Allow me to warn you against cold baths if you are unaccustomed to them. Above all, if you do not enjoy cold bathing, do not indulge in it on the theory that it is health building. I doubt that it is.

Answers to Health Queries

W. J. C. Q.—What causes the knees and feet to be cold most of the time?

A.—This is probably due to poor circulation. Build up the general health and your circulation will improve.

Madge Believes Her Father Has Uncovered Important Facts

Lillian and I glanced at each other furtively as my father asked: "Where are the men?" There was that in the peremptory request which made us surmise that some additional circumstance had disturbed him during his trip to the village.

"With the boys in the basement, I answered quietly, and my father patently remembering his credo that I must not be excited sat down in the nearest chair.

"One does not realize here, how terribly hot it is outside," he said banally and this time Lillian and I did not dare to exchange glances, for though the day had been warm, there had been no excessive heat for August, and directly after my father's departure for the village there had sprung up the refreshing breeze which almost invariably comes to the east end of the island in the late afternoon.

"I've always proudly claimed," I commented, smiling, "that this farm house veranda is the coolest spot on the island. Isn't that breeze wonderful?"

"It always makes me hungry," Lillian said, giving me my cue. I guessed, with intention. "Isn't it almost dinner time?"

"Yes, you poor starved travelers, it is," I assured her. "I told Katie to have dinner earlier tonight. If you will excuse me I will call the youngsters and send them up to Katherine to get calmed down before dinner. They have been having a riotous time down in their playroom with Harry and Dicky."

"Better send the men to get calmed down," Lillian drawled as I rose. "They need it more than the boys."

My father was on his feet before I had taken three steps, and his voice was peremptory, though tender.

"Sit down," he said. "I will tell them you want them."

I obeyed him and Lillian grinned at me in recognition of this additional instance of the well-meant but irksome care, amounting to fussiness, with which my father has surrounded me ever since my tiny new daughter came to the world.

It was but a few seconds before I heard my young son and his cousin in voluble protest upon the stairs.

"Your father must be in a hurry," Lillian said. "If he hadn't gone down there the kids wouldn't have thought about starting yet."

I smiled at her just estimate of the indulgence with which her husband and mine treat the children, and then Junior and Roderick burst into the room, both voicing their favorite expletive, learned from the Ticer family, of "Aw shucks!" as they raced toward me.

"Aw! Mums!" Junior's voice was almost tearful as he clutched my arm. "We were just having a race with our trains and—"

"It's a rotten deal," Roderick said vehemently.

I was conscious that Dicky and my father with Harry Underwood were standing in the doorway but I also knew that neither Junior's father nor grandfather would interfere for a second with whatever measures I took to deal with the rudeness of the small boys. Dicky and I always have scrupulously avoided even the appearance of interference with any disciplinary measures employed by the other and my father is always strictly neutral.

I took each boy by the arm without speaking and swung them in front of me so that I could look directly into their eyes. I did not speak a word, only gazed steadily and gravely at them until their eyes dropped and they wriggled uneasily.

"I thought you knew how gentlemen behaved," I said at last, "but you evidently need many more lessons. If we did not need the veranda I should insist upon your practicing a quiet entrance for a half hour or so. You are to go up now to Aunt Katherine and get ready for dinner. Tell her I said that if she thinks best you are to go on punishment for 15 minutes because you were rude. You may go now."

They turned and with a hasty, mechanical "Sorry" went disconsolately out of the door, giving no look to the three men who stepped aside to let them pass and who made no comment until the sound of their lagging footsteps died away upon the stairs.

"The last time I saw a small boy mildly reproved because he was rude," Harry Underwood drawled, "he lay down upon the floor and kicked and screamed until the whole hotel came a-runnin'. You remember, Lil?

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Whiteheads are beadlike masses. Slit with a sterilized needle. Press out the substance gently. Apply a solution of boric acid.

Camphor ice is a good application to overcome rough, chapped lips. Colorless lipstick can be bought at the beauty factory. Used twice a day they give smoothness to the surface of the lips. Perfect coloring of the lips depends upon good circulation. Thick lips are the result of relaxation of the muscles. Women who have them should become mouth conscious.

It is characteristic of the skinny, wan-faced gal that she can't look food in the face without screaming. The sight of a lamb chop puts her teeth on edge. Sumpin wrong. The healthy individual has a good appetite, the odor of good chow fills her with zest. Wan-face should take herself to the family doc, who will put her through a course of sprouts, find out what's the matter. She may be anaemic or suffering from some simple intestinal disorder that can be corrected. Physical upsets are responsible for many beauty ills.

Summer Traffic Dangers

By CONSTANCE CAMERON

The motorists know that school is out just as surely as the children know it. Even the most skilled of drivers is chilled often at the proximity to accidents involving children. Grim happenings of that sort are common—deaths and hospital cases.

Summer is the children's playtime, and no one begrudges them their abandoned fun. But wise parents will do well to consider the dangers of certain types of play activities, and substitute others which are safer.

The bouncing ball seems to be one of the most dangerous play objects when used on sidewalks near the street. The balls seem to be alive in their determination to bounce out into the roadway, and a child intent upon his game will many times bounce out after the toy, regardless of the dangers in the street.

The tricycle, carrying its proud small rider, gets out of the safety zone many times, while the toy automobile, in which a child may ride, is a fearful temptation to its young owner. The child's sole desire, when very young, is to imitate, and driving his "car" on the sidewalk is not really and truly driving to him. A penalty of losing the use of either of the toys mentioned for a period of 10 days should be enforced without leniency where a careless or heedless child is concerned. This is a matter which edges out of the realm of discipline into the real of life and death and there should be no compromise.

The rule "Stay on the sidewalk or I shall take away your car for one whole week," should be executed sternly.

Games of "tag" and other running games should be played in backyards, not near the street.

You can minimize the danger to your children by making your backyard or porch as attractive as possible with workable playthings. Small playhouses may range from a home-made affair to an expensive toy house, but any playhouse will keep children happily occupied and away from danger. Sandboxes are always magnets to young children. Luncheons can be served as picnics under a tree, a swing can be hung, or a slide installed at little enough expense to compensate for the security of the children.

Keep the youngsters off the streets. Motorists can be careful, but they can't do it all. Help them and save the children.

The Cardiac Clinic

By DOROTHY ROE

While the doctors do research on fever and chills,
Why can't they evolve some select heartache pills?

It's a funny thing, that hard-working organ known as the heart.

It's responsible for half the aches and pains that learned physicians call by scientific names.

It's always getting bruised and battered and normally it is broken into little bits at least every spring.

But we patch it up and it keeps on going.

It gives us the most trouble when we are very young.

After a while we grow accustomed to its capers and blame its aches on our liver, or the state of our bank account.

No doctor has ever discovered a cure for a good heartache. If one ever does he will become the most important person in the world.

For the ills of heart are responsible for most of our trouble on this sky-scraper-bristling footstool.

External things can be going along as smoothly as possible. We may be successful in our work, we may have all the money we need and more friends than we can count.

But if there's a nagging little pain in our heart, because of somebody whose cardiac organ didn't beat in time with ours—the whole works doesn't mean a thing.

On the other hand, we may be out of a job and have just one dress to wear. They may have foreclosed the mortgage on the old homestead and the wolf may be at the doorstep. But if we're in love and that perverse but all-important heart is throbbing a rhythmic tune, we're just as happy as if we had a limousine, a penthouse and 17 diamond bracelets.

Think of all the people you know.

Aren't their moods and their ups and downs determined by the state of their hearts? Of course they are.

Captains of finance, who could buy and sell a railroad a couple of times a day without even getting their neckties mussed, have been known to grow tongue-tied and uncertain, hesitant and tremulous, in the presence of some fluffy and frivolous femme whose eyelashes made their hearts stand still.

And women who declared themselves self-sufficient, who announced that they had planned their lives well, and would not have them gummed up by some bungling male, have thrown up careers, success, fame and all the rest of it because of the timber of some man's voice, or the way his hair grew.

Sane and level-headed men turn into frantic and helpless children when somebody upsets their heart-beats.

Cool and calculating women forget their financial plans and live in poverty-stricken bliss.

Girls and boys who oughtn't to have a care in the world, by the standards of their grandfathers, grow thin and pale and refuse to eat or sleep because of the old, old cycle, when Jack loves Jill, but Jill loves John and John in turn is cuh-razy over Joan.

By the way, how is YOUR heart getting on? Write and let me know.

An Ironing Tip

Save the silk underwear until last when ironing with an electric iron. Then the iron may be disconnected and there is no danger of scorching. Also the iron is easier to handle without the cord.

Correct Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A Wedding Buffet

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me what would be correct to serve as refreshments at a very informal evening wedding? It is to be held at home (reception directly after the ceremony) and about 75 guests will be present.

A thinks that ice cream, cake, cookies, punch and candies would be correct. B thinks that a salad or sandwiches should also be served. M. C.

B's suggestion, to add a salad and small sandwiches, is an excellent one, and this would make the supper a more consequential one. Too, it means that there are two "courses," a good rule for a buffet meal. The salad might be a delicious fruit salad made as rich as you wish it to be, and with this serve dainty thin sandwiches, or tiny hot biscuits or biscuits split and toasted. Or crackers with cheese toasted on them. Then, for your second course, the dessert of ice cream and cakes. Also it is best to serve a hot drink, hot coffee, as well as a cold punch.

Napkins at Dinner

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When I go out to dinner, on which side of the plate should I put my napkin?

WANTS TO KNOW.

Leave your napkin, if you are dining in a restaurant or in a home for the one meal only, just as it is, unfolded I mean, on the left of the plate. Or it really isn't any crime to leave it on the right of the plate, if there is more room there. If you are in a home, and will be there for several meals, watch your hostess, and do with your napkin what she does with hers.

Tuxedo Only for Evening

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if I can wear a Tuxedo to an afternoon dance?

EDGAR.

No, sir. The Tuxedo is correct for an informal evening dance, but should never be worn before six-thirty in the evening, at the very earliest. Seven o'clock is better.

SPELL 'SHALOM' MANY WAYS

In connection with the dedication of the new synagogue at Beacon street and Shady avenue it was discovered that there were at least eight spellings of the second word in its name.

The city directory disclosed the spelling as Shalem. The telephone directory showed Shalom. A special R. L. Polk volume declared the spelling to be Sholan. The city directory of 1925 printed it as Shalan and its successor in 1926 said Shelem. Spellings such as Shalone, Shalane and Shalim were also given on good authority. As a final authority an appeal was made to Rabbi Goodman. A Rose who declared the spelling to be Shalom.

Kitty Reveals Facts and Thad Wins Divorce

CHAPTER XXVI.

"The girl has gone crazy with fright," bellowed Haben, the lawyer for Arline when I so calmly announced that it was all a lie.

The judge looked at me keenly.

"We have every proof, Your Honor," Haben insisted.

Thad's lawyer arose and asked if counsel for the defendant was finished with the witness.

"She is an incompetent witness, Your Honor, she has idenly lost her mind."

Haben was red in the face as he shouted this, but Arline was pale as a ghost. The detective sat there staring at me with his mouth open, too dazed to pull himself together.

Thad's lawyer went over to the judge and Haben prompted him then. I heard Haben protesting. I swear I never let her or spoke to her, he said.

Finally the judge said something about either questioning or turning me over to Mr. Sanders.

Haben made a gesture of washing his hands of the whole affair.

SHOWS AGREEMENT

Sanders asked me to tell what I knew about it. I told did. I produced the letter Arline had written asking to come and see her or let her come and see me. I told her just what happened. I produced the check for $25,000. Naturally I had never cashed it, for never for a single moment had I entertained the idea of framing Thad or of permitting it to be believed that there had been any affair between us.

Haben made objection after objection until the judge finally suggested that he object to the testimony I was giving "in toto." That was a new one I learned.

Then I produced the agreement. I even produced the other half of the letter paper I had torn off. It matched, and the blank half had my monogram on it. I told of the detective's visit of how I suggested that I never see the lawyer.

Haben protested. He cried out that it was all a trick and then he declared that there were no witnesses and my testimony was worthless.

Sanders asked how about the exhibits, the letter, the check and the agreement.

"Faked," snapped Haben.

"Miss Carson, come forward and be sworn," he said.

She threw off the veil.

It was my old pal and roommate, Viola. Of course I knew it all the time. That was why I had her listening in the kitchenette both times I talked with Arline and she could see through the crack in the door.

Viola's story certainly clinched it.

Arline fainted and it was no bluff.

The detective started to leave but was held.

Haben, foxy little rat, retired from the case. He insisted that he was led to believe everything was straight and above board.

THAD THANKFUL

Thad was informed right then and there that he would get his decree without trouble. I gave Viola a wink and we started to edge out. The judge called me over for a brief talk. I told him that if I had reported Arline's first visit to me she might have got wind of it, but when I had fixed everything up I went and saw Mr. Sanders. Thanks, lawyer. He said some mighty nice things to me.

Viola had also slipped out of the room and I followed her.

Sanders came running after me.

"Wait a moment, Miss Mason," he said. "Mr. Parsons wants to see you."

"I don't want to see him—ever," I said.

Thad had followed him to the door and heard this. I ran down the hall.

Viola and I celebrated that evening right at home with a delicatessen broiled chicken and fixings, lounging around in kimonos and chattering about the excitement of the day.

When Thad had accused me of being a female Judas that night he saw me out with Chubb, he didn't know the truth. I hadn't gone to his lawyer then with my story and evidence, but his lawyer had learned in some way that a Miss Katherine Mason was to be the star witness for Arline. Naturally Thad was bitter.

His letter to me and his attempts to telephone later were solely to thank me for what I was doing and I didn't want his thanks. I wished I could have thrown a scare into him up to the last minute.

Of course I did see Thad for he came that very night when Viola and myself, still in slippers and kimonas, were clearing up after our feast.

Right in front of Viola Thad said: "Kate, you did it because you love me."

"Thad," I said, "you are all wrong. I did it because if I had refused she would have hired someone else to frame you and I wanted to see her get soaked."

"Miss Carson," he said, "make this girl marry me as soon as my decree comes through."

"I couldn't do it if I had the army and navy to help me, Mr. Parsons, and I wouldn't try to change her mind, but she's one swell kid just the same," was Viola's answer.

VISITS CORA

"We are still friends anyway, and some day I'll convince you, Katie," Thad declared.

He sat there an hour and talked about the hearing, laughing with us over the explosion when I calmly announced that the detective's testimony was all a lie.

"They let the detective off," Thad said, because they didn't intend to do anything to Arline and they couldn't let her off without letting the other chap off, as she was the instigator."

"I guess she'll be snooty to me some more," I remarked.

After he had gone Viola got serious. She thought I ought to relent and marry Thad.

"I'm having too much fun playing around to get married and settle down," I told her.

Forrest Malvern didn't get back to the city until late. I was getting awfully tired of Chubb Osmond. He was jolly and nice, but the way he would look at me like a calf and every week or so remind me that I had half promised to marry him got on my nerves.

When Forrest did get back he wasn't there more than a month before he went to Europe on business.

He suggested that I go with him.

I suggested that I would if he made it a party and we took along some real chaperones.

That ended that.

On visiting my sister Cora who was perfectly happy with her second husband, and had presented her little boy and girl with a brand new half-brother who should drop in but Peter Thompson.

I knew darned well that Cora had tipped him that I was coming out.

Peter looked pretty good. He drove up to Cora's place in a really nice car. He didn't talk about himself or his business except to say that he was satisfied.

"I'm building a house," he said suddenly.

I thought I saw another proposal coming and decided to joke with him.

"What are you using for money, Peter?" I asked.

"Oh, a few dimes and nickels I scraped together."

STILL WANTS HER

"I'll save cigaret coupons for you. With 10,000 you can get a can opener for the kitchen," I said.

"The house will be done in the spring and furnished. How would you like to pick out the furniture, Kate?"

"I'd send you into bankruptcy with my expensive tastes, Peter. You find the right girl for your house and let her do the picking."

"You are the right girl, Kitty."

I smiled and shook my head.

"When are you going to marry me?" he asked.

"Never—you know that, Peter, we'd never be happy. Forget all that, please."

"By next spring you'll be tired of playing around, then we'll select the furniture and get married," he insisted.

"I'll never be tired of playing around, so long as I can be lifted into a wheel chair, Peter."

"I'll wait for you forever, Katie," he declared seriously.

"It will be twice as long as that," I insisted.

"No, it won't. I have a hunch it won't be long."

"You and your hunches, Peter," I laughed, "can't you see I'd simply die, now, to settle down in a little cottage and do nothing but get meals and wind the clock and go to bed and get meals again, over and over and over. I'd go absolutely crazy."

"No, dear, you would get sane again. You are somewhat crazy now, but you'll get sane again," he persisted, with such seriousness that he frightened me.

Kitty meets Peter at the home of a fashionable friend. Read Monday's interesting installment.

DAILY SHORT STORY

Olga Failed

(All names of characters in this story are fictitious.)

Entertainer's Plot to Marry Millionaire Foiled

"Bet you the next bottle of Scotch they do."

"All right, dearie."

Olga titilated the 'phone dial, consulting a number she had copied from the telephone book.

"Is this the Perry Estates office?" Olga asked in a honeyed voice.

"This is Mrs. Larchman, of Tuxedo Park, would you give me Mr. Kenton Perry's address, please?" Olga asked after being told that she had the Perry Estates office.

"Sorry, I couldn't very well do that," said a man's voice, but anything sent here will be forwarded."

"Oh de-ah," said Olga, plaintively, winking at Mrs. Hudley, "if this doesn't go out on the next mail it will be too late, it is a wedding announcement. Kenton's friend, Lady Pushley of Mannex Hants, you know."

"Why, er—"

The man didn't know, but he was flattered to think anyone should believe he would know Kenton Perry's friends. The man was merely a clerk who wished, a score of times a day, that he had the fortune of young Kenton Perry.

"In that case, Mrs. er—"

"Mrs. Larchman, surely you know, Prof. Larchman's wife," Olga drawled.

Mrs. Hudley chuckled so audibly that Olga gesticulated wildly to her to stop.

"Oh, yes, yes, well, in this instance, it will be quite all right," said the voice, "Mr. Perry can be reached at Green Valley, Punxton County, it is a small village."

Olga repeated the address, thanked the man sweetly and jumped up and did a few dance steps. She waggled a finger at Mrs. Hudley.

MAKES MEMORANDUM

"Go get—you lose; go get the Scotch—send Hops down for it. I told you I had a beautiful hunch. Ever since Mr. Dodderidge told me that Kenton Perry raved over me at the Green Bow Club I've had a hunch that I could land him."

Olga wrote the address in a tiny memo book and slipped it into her handbag.

"Green Valley; some hick place; all the better, easier to get next to him in a small town, Sukey."

"Oh, for Pete's sake, Olga, if I'm to be your aunt, quit calling me Sukey," Mrs. Hudley begged.

"You just remember your own stuff. I won't make any breaks."

Olga was going over her sport clothes, getting ready to pack. The boy came up with the bottle of Scotch which Mrs. Hudley paid for smilingly.

"I should worry, Olga, I'm being paid well for being your aunt and if you land this human mint I'll see that you keep your word and come across with 50 grand."

"No 'if' about it, old dear, I'll get him by fair means or any old means."

They drank and giggled and planned.

Two days later Olga Heath and her "aunt," Mrs. Jerome Heath, who had been Mrs. Sue Hudley the day before, drove into the tiny hamlet of Green Valley. The swanky car belonged to Skip Miggs, who, being in the racketeering game, had a flock of cars. He gladly let Olga take it. He and Olga were quite fond of each other.

GIVEN DIRECTIONS

"What is the best hotel here?" Olga asked as she drove up to the tiny railroad station.

"Green Valley House, Miss, on account of it bein' the only hotel," the man said, with a chuckle.

He gave directions.

The Green Valley House was a large rambling white building with giant shade trees, pretty lawn and an air of quiet and respectability.

There were nine guests at the place when Olga arrived and asked for connecting rooms for herself and "auntie."

Olga came down to dinner in a most becoming gown, not at all gaudy, a really refined thing. She and her "aunt" looked all about the large cool dining room but Kenton Perry was not there. Olga knew him. That is, she had been introduced to him at the night club but had only a minute to talk before she had to run and get ready for the show.

Olga was singing love ballads then, because she had one of the momentarily popular throaty voices.

She didn't want to ask right out upon registering if Mr. Kenton Perry was there. Word might get to him that she had inquired. Her game was to be so surprised to see him, and to remind him that they had been introduced.

Having been assured by old Dodderidge that young Perry had raved over her, Olga imagined that she could see Perry's face brighten upon sight of her.

Her first setback came when she was told that Mr. Perry kept a suite of rooms there, but that he spent much of his time in a bungalow on an island he owned on Green Lake.

Talking it over with Mrs. Hudley, whom she now called "Auntie de—ah" on every possible occasion, they came to the conclusion that perhaps this would be still better. Olga would meet Kenton Perry, they would get very friendly, and they would have such sweet courtships together, out on his island.

Olga met Kenton Perry the next day. She was down at the lake landing with a camera when he came ashore in a canoe, she recognized him despite his tan, his torn sweater and once white ducks that were grimy and scintilated with fish scales.

"Imagine Kenton Perry being at such a quiet place as this!" Olga cried as he came up to the landing.

He stared at her a moment.

"Oh, yes, yes, I remember you," he pulled off his light felt hat to which were fastened several bass lures. "You are Olga Hatch—you were a riot at the Green Bow Club one night. I mean every night. I am sure Mr. Dodderidge introduced us."

"Imagine you remembering me, Mr. Perry."

She walked up to the post office with him.

"I hope aunty won't be terribly shocked, she's over on the hotel veranda—Mrs. Jerome Heath, you may have heard of her, her husband was a famous surgeon."

Kenton Perry regretted that he had not heard of her.

Every day, or every other day Kenton came ashore from his island. Several times he played a few sets of tennis with Olga. One evening she and "auntie" accepted his invitation to go over to his bungalow. Olga was glad to sing some sentimental songs for him.

OLGA MAKES MISTAKE

Twice Olga was up extremely early, hoping he might see her on the landing and invite her to go fishing with him. Alone in a canoe with him she could work wonders, she was sure, and she could go on his island on some pretext.

A boy paddled out to the island, leaped ashore, and soon went out again with Kenton, in a larger canoe. They went into various coves, casting and trolling.

That is, Olga thought it was a boy.

In reality it was not a boy, it was Mary Keniston, who lived on the lake shore farm with her parents. Mary and Kenton had been good pals ever since they were kids. Kenton had always spent a few weeks on this lake and Mary had always known the best fishing places and showed the greater skill at fishing.

She wore khaki knickerbockers, a flannel shirt and an old felt hat and at a distance seemed to be a boy of 15.

Mary was 20 and just through college. She wanted to go abroad and study some more, but wasn't quite settled on that point.

Kenton told her about Olga, remarking that it was unusual for a night club performer to come up to such a quiet place for a vacation.

Mary said little, but did a lot of thinking. When she went up to the village Mary was most becomingly dressed in proper habiliments for a young lady. She had seen Olga and she did not care at all for Olga nor trust Olga nor want Olga to be in Green Valley.

Meanwhile Olga was getting desperate. Time was fleeting and while Kenton was very sweet to her, he didn't fall for any of her advances.

"Listen," Olga said to Mrs. Hudley, "I'm going out to his island tonight, about midnight. I'm going to fix things, it will be easy. I'll set my canoe and his canoe adrift, flop in the water and go up to his bungalow all wet. He'll have to give me something dry. You do your stuff at 1 o'clock, come over in another canoe, throw your weeps, wail that I have been a trusting little fool, that I was so innocent."

INFORMED OF MARRIAGE

"Ahead of you dead. I'll say things that will make him beg of me to have a speedy and quiet wedding."

Mary was out that night trying some luminous lures. She saw Olga heading for the island, and she had a hunch. She beached the canoe at the hidden little landing, called to Kenton to come out and see how the luminous lures worked and got him away.

Olga beached her canoe at the front landing, then set it adrift, along with Kenton's canoe. She waded into the water and went to the bungalow, she went in, no one greeted her.

Her aunt came out at once. They waited and waited and got disgusted and decided to go back.

Auntie's canoe was gone!

Long after daylight they signaled and were taken off.

"Lots of excitement in town this morning," Joe Samson said. Joe had gone in his dory and brought them ashore. "yes sir-ee, lots of excitement. Darned if Mary Keniston and Kenton Perry didn't get married this morning, down to Mary's home. They've started off some place in a car with all of Mary's fishing tackle, lookin' like a couple of tramps, but them that has plenty of money don't care how they look—they seemed mighty happy—"

He told her.

Politicians Will Attempt to Confuse the Voters—Brief Comments on Local News.

The question is Joseph G. Armstrong, Sr., and Senator James J. Coyne will be team mates in the county commissioners race is made more complicated by the entrance of Sheriff Robert S. Cain into the contest. This has been spoken of as a "smoke screen" designed to conceal the real situation from the political strategists and from the voters. Perhaps it is not, but there can be no doubt that many attempts will be made to confuse the citizens.

*A not very widely known person named T. J. Mc*Vean took out nominating petitions for county commissioner yesterday. If County Commissioner C. C. McGovern is also candidate in the primary there may be confusion because of voters' inability to distinguish between the two. It behooves them, therefore, to impress the initials of the candidates on their memory.

*All the offices to be filled in the forthcoming elec*tion are important, but those of county commissioner and district attorney are particularly important. The county commissioners exercise power second only to that wielded by the mayor. They also spend many millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money annually and determine the county tax rate. The district attorney decides whether or not racketeering and grafting shall be tolerated.

In considering the fitness of the candidates for these jobs, therefore, citizens would do well to inquire into their affiliations with the Republican machine which has imposed such high taxes and bad government on this community. The machine's candidates will be under obligations to the machine, and there is reason to doubt if they can fulfill the obligations and at the same time give the people the best kind of service.

Seven judges are to be elected to the Common Pleas Court bench and four to the County Court bench. It is just as important that the judiciary should be free from obligations to the Republican gang as that the district attorney should be. Independent candidates for the judgeships will not lack ammunition for their fight.

*Mayor Kline has partly atoned for making a com*mittee from the Central Labor Union come to his office every day for three days before he would consent to see them. They came to ask him to mediate in the taxicab drivers' strike, and he has at last promised to do so. The strike, besides causing much damage to property, is giving a multitude of citizens no little inconvenience.

*A Squirrel Hill woman complains that two police*men who came to her apartment after she had reported a robbery were drunk and invited her husband to drink with them. This occurred two days after Director Clark of the Department of Public Safety told the Pennsylvania Police Chiefs Association in a public address that he takes a drink now and then.

*It is encouraging to learn that some of the Pitts*burgh coal operators are taking a more hopeful view of the possibilities for benefit in the conference proposed by the Hoover administration. Numerous suggestions for the solution of the industry's problems have been evoked by the recent developments. The parley, if called, will have plenty of material to consider.

Ralph Liphart, state game protector, reports that a golden eagle with a wing spread of six feet was killed by a farmer in Frazer Township last Wednesday after it had tried to carry off an Airedale dog. This is scarcely less interesting and is certainly more important than the "discovery" of the Lake sea-serpent in Lake Erie a few days ago.

*The incident bears witness to the wildness of cer*tain parts of Allegheny County. There are spots within 10 or 15 miles of Pittsburgh where it is hard to realize that a great city is only a short distance away. The Clinton-Enlow road, for example, is a lonesome highway where one may sometimes drive for a mile or two without encountering anyone.

*The unpaved country roads are not likely to re*main unpaved long. Gov. Pinchot sank a pick into a highway in York County Thursday, thus inaugurating the 20,000-mile rural road construction program. A fair portion of the town-to highways to be taken over by the state are in Allegheny County. Pavement will destroy the seclusion of some very attractive places, but it will be a boon to the farmers.

Capt. Frank M. Hawks established new records in both directions in a round-trip airplane flight from New York to Havana Thursday. It probably will not be long before many of us will be making journeys as speedy as his. Capt. Hawks predicts in an article in the "March of Events" section of the Sunday Sun-Telegraph that within two years passenger airplanes will do 200 miles an hour.

*Pittsburghers interested in the reasons for stout*ness and slenderness should read in the American Weekly Magazine section of the Sun-Telegraph tomorrow "why fat people are good-natured." The article is scientific, but not heavy. The magazine will also have an entertaining story of an ultramodern girl who thought she could defy the conventions. It is called "Pandora Lifts the Lid."

For those who wilt in hot weather and lack the energy to read anything but the headlines, the Sun-Telegraph will provide an abundance of entertainment tomorrow in the Gravure section. There will be charming pictures in color, and some intensely interesting reproductions of old photographs taken in Pittsburgh many years ago. Up-to-the-minute news photos, too, of course.

Maj. Lynn Adams, commander of the state police, declines to comply with the request of the McKees Rocks Citizens' Committee that he send men there to investigate the bombing of the home of Thomas J. Conley, a leader of the movement for civic reform. This will be less of a disappointment now that Fire Marshal Piarr has started an investigation. After all, it is a job for detectives rather than state troopers.

The disclosure that a full-size model of a corner of the new eight-column Mellon Institute has been erected in wood and plaster in a cornfield near the Fox Chapel road has made it possible to visualize the grandeur and beauty of the building, which will stand at Fifth and Bellefield avenues. The new temple of science is going to be an architectural gem and a credit to Pittsburgh.

What a difference one little ocean can make. For instance, it can change the heart of Uncle Sam completely.

On the right side another little lady, "America's Prospects" is left to shift for herself—nobody hands her anything.

Her boy friend, Mr. Business Revival, is up a tree, as you see, and the dog is busy.

Well, if giving money away, IN EUROPE, is the best we can do, then that's the best we can do.

Perhaps it will all be written down to our credit in the Book of Judgment. Meanwhile, what is YOUR private opinion of old Prohibition, and the way he is treating this country?

Two Very Different Lines

In Britain and the United States

BRITISHERS IN LINE WAITING FOR MONEY. IN AMERICA THEY WOULD BE WAITING FOR SOUP.

Over here when we see a long line of men you know they are waiting for soup or bread, or waiting to enter an employment agency.

When you see a lot of girls sitting in a row, you take it for granted that they are waiting to persuade somebody that they ought to be hired.

In Britain, where they watched the French Revolution just across the Channel, and where they have had serious troubles of their own in the past, they adopt a system that seems strange to us.

Everybody in Britain must look for work, and take it if he finds it. If a man or woman is willing to work and cannot find work, he or she is put on the "dole," which means that government pays them each week enough money to live. If the man or woman has dependent children, the amount is increased.

Not only are the unemployed paid a certain sum sufficient to keep them alive while looking for employment, but Britain's Labor government recognizes the union labor rule that a man must work at his union trade. An idle man cannot be compelled to accept work outside of his own union.

Thus there are in England 100,000 coal miners on the "dole." Coal mining is at a low ebb, and many of those men may die without finding jobs as miners. But under the rules they are not compelled to look for work outside of coal mining. And unless things change they may go into old age receiving the "dole," waiting vainly for work at coal mining.

All of this seems foolish to us, and part of it is foolish. A man should take any work he can get, as long as it is respectable work, in preference to charity, by whatever name you call it. And the "dole" is NATIONAL CHARITY.

At the same time while making our rules, tolerating our bread lines and our long lines of unemployed, it is not for us to criticize what other nations do.

The British give the "dole" to 2,300,000 out of work. It costs many millions of pounds, many hundreds of millions of dollars. But they consider it cheaper than risking the possibility of 2,500,000 dissatisfied turning toward revolution.

Let us hope that world conditions will improve, and the depression disappear, like a fog in the morning, take in with it the crowd that awaits in England for hard cash, and the other crowds that wait in America for soup or a job.

Building castles in the air!
Ah, what joy I find
In those splendid structures where
All is good and kind!

There no cherished hope has died.
Hate has sown no seed.
Not a friend has turned aside
In the day of need.

There no creeping doubt can gain
Entrance for an hour;
Envy brings no sting, no pain,
Malice has no power.

Every heart is true and good.
Fit for highest trust.
Not one soul misunderstood
Not one thought unjust.

Perfect romance flowers there,
Flawless there each dream;
In my castles in the air
Gladness reigns supreme.

MARTYRS OF SCIENCE

By Archibald Henderson

Science is a stern mistress. It is often dangerous to discover things which may eventually avert danger from others. It is often more than dangerous. It is deadly to take the chance which science requires. Perhaps it is a question of allowing oneself to be inoculated with deadly germs, for which the antidote is not a 100 per cent specific. If the antidote does not work, then you are gone a noble victim, or, as the newspapers say, a martyr to science.

A remarkable, a hair-raising, a blood-curdling book might be written narrating the adventures of actual or acquiescent martyrs to science, some of whom died, some recovering. A familiar illustration in this country is what is known as the "Poison Squad." These are volunteers for scientific experimentation at the Federal Bureau of Chemistry in Washington. These are not ignorant men who, for pay or out of idle curiosity, allow themselves to be experimented on, and subject themselves to dangerous risks.

They are expert chemists who know what they are about when they eat various adulterated food products. The experiments are conducted under the direction of expert toxicologists, men skilled in the science of poison. And yet the risks are often grave, the tasters sometimes become seriously ill. One of these eaters of adulterated food, Robert Vance Freeman, died—all the science and skill of the expert toxicologists being incapable of saving his life.

In Master Minds of Modern Sciences, Bridges and Tiltman have described a number of these dangerous experiments, chiefly made by the famous bio-chemist J. B. S. Haldane. During the World War Haldane and a companion were voluntarily imprisoned in a steel cylinder seven feet high and five feet in diameter. The manhole was closed and the air sucked out until the pressure corresponded to that of a mountaintop 22,000 feet high. On taking a few breaths from a cylinder of oxygen Haldane experienced a startling series of sensations.

The electric light appeared so brilliant that it seemed as if the fuse would melt, while the noise of the pumping machine engine apparently increased fourfold. They came out of the experiment safe and sound, but Haldane had recorded in his note book that his companion appeared to be drunk.

Oxygen taken after a certain altitude is reached has the effect of making the recipients singularly quarrelsome. It is found, regardless of whether people become quarrelsome or not, that oxygen is almost a necessity above 16,000 feet. It is the belief of J. B. S. Haldane that oxygen has a great future as medicine. Indeed he is on record as stating that, properly administered, it may halve the death rate from pneumonia. But it must be given continuously, perhaps for as long as three days and nights on end, and it must not be breathed pure, for in that state it is a slow poison.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

The most dangerous animal on earth is man.

He is infinitely more dangerous than a lion or a snake because, with his greater brain and wider opportunity, he can contrive more vicious cruelties.

This condition won't last forever. Slowly man is growing up. But just at present we're still pretty close to our low-browed, shaggy-thighed grandpas—and their selfishness, cowardice, stupidity and brutality run amuck in our blood.

You never can tell what the other fellow's going to do. He never can tell himself. He's a whole jungle of brute desire and fear, walking around in a pair of civilized plus fours. And at any moment the hidden jungle may smash through the civilized veneer.

And even if man doesn't commit any overt act, his stupidity constitutes a constant menace. Sins of OMISSION raise quite as much Cain as sins of COMMISSION.

No use trying to blindfold yourself to these facts—nor shush them up—nor laugh them off. You are in a dangerous world.

Does that mean that you should carry a gun—or its mental equivalent? Go armed for trouble—suspecting everyone? No—that's the surest way of getting into trouble. Your greatest insurance against the menace in humanity is not suspicion, cynicism or violence—

IT IS FAITH.

Faith will do more to make a man and keep him safe than any other power on earth. It is the most potent instrument you can use because it appeals to that thing within him which the man himself holds most precious—it appeals to his PRIDE.

Pride is a tremendous force. You can see it at work in forms of life which we consider lower than man . . . in a dog, for example. A dog's pride is as sensitive as a man's. He suffers acutely if you shame him . . . goes vicious if you shame or punish him too much. But he'll break his heart, give you his life, if you believe in him.

Have you ever patted the head of a fine dog . . . looked deep into his eyes, as a comrade . . . said "Good old fellow!" If you have, you've seen a miracle. You've seen pride leap like a flame in the depths of those adoring eyes . . . seen his happy heart thumping against his hairy hide.

If you want to arouse all that's fine in a dog, believe in him. If you want to protect yourself against all that's dangerous in a dog, believe in him. He may be a strange and vicious dog, he may bite others, but unless he is actually rabid, he'll make friends with you.

Strange how we recognize that truth about dogs but we can't see that the same thing works with men and women. For it does. Faith is your greatest insurance against the wolf in a dog . . . and it's also your greatest insurance against the gorilla in a man.

Believe in a man . . . be a partner to the pride in a man . . . and chances are he'll do anything for you.

Distrust a man . . . expect the worst from a man . . . and the chances are he'll do anything TO you.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. MUNDY

Don't make such an effort to be entertaining.

This individual seeks to have attention addressed to himself.

No person can keep talking constantly and say things that are bright, entertaining or enlightening.

The one who tries to do so is soon looked upon as a pest.

You may be a good story teller, have had interesting experiences, but even these qualities become wearisome by too much persistent talking.

In company people like to hear from different persons and they like to have a little chance to talk themselves.

If you are talking too much in any one circle you may be sure the members of it are getting pretty tired of associating with you.

Why be a magpie?

Listen more and you'll learn more and be convinced of how silly you are.

Give your tongue a rest.

Text For Today Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's: and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.—Deuteronomy, i:17.

FRANCE DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

PARIS, July 25.—Broadway, mourning the passing of its night life, should see gay Paree. By 11 o'clock here the most flamboyant nocturnal centers are as quiet as Main street in a prairie town. Montmartre after dark expresses about as much gaiety and irresponsibility as the Union League Club.

Zelli's keeps open but its patrons are so scarce that Joe no longer remains at the entrance to clap hands and shout: "The royal box for the prince!" Ciro's does only a fair luncheon and at dinner practically nothing. Prunier's closed tight the night I dined there at 9:45 o'clock.

The old time go-as-you-please places called Chez This and That have simply passed out of the night picture. For 10 years after the Stanford White murder The Dead Rat attracted the curious as the spot where Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit cut their European capers.

I dropped into it last night. It was empty and when I say empty I mean there was not a single customer. And it was after 12. The famed Moulin Rouge has gone cinema. The hideous bi-sexual resorts such as Petite Chaumiere and others strung on Montmartre peaks are all shuttered.

The truth is, of course, that Parisian night life was supported entirely by Americans and the British and with the pinch-purses of the times it can only await a brighter epoch. Montmartre resort keepers thus feel the literal translation of the name—the Hill of Martyrs.

To my notion not even the faintest glamor of old Montmartre romance remains. There was a time when ascending the heights of the butte and exploring the tortuous streets—such as winding rue Lepic—was a breathless adventure. At every turn was the unexpected. A naughty nook or corrupt cellar.

Boulevard Clichy has become as cheaply commercial as lower Sixth avenue. As tawdry almost as the Bowery. The feverish pleasures have simmered to dregs of middle class monotony—the shooting gallery, the merry-go-round and street corner loafing. The Montmartre of Trilby is as dead as a door nail.

I have discovered a new way of getting a desirable table at those gala luncheons—the only crowded event left in Paris life. I phone in the name of Baron and Baroness McIntyre and it always does the trick with much royal bowing as a welcome. Scratch the Parisian menial and you find the royalist.

The mannikins at Worth's are wearing open work sandals revealing tootsies with nails lacquered with a brilliant red polish. While there I kept my eyes cast demurely down. And was rewarded by seeing one, a stray perhaps, with nails glossed green.

Patrons summon cafe waiters with a sucking lip noise—as we call a dog or chirrup to a horse. In America it would likely inspire a swing from the ankle. In the same fashion the Parisian waiter resents finger snapping. And when you make him mad he cries out loud.

I watched two French couples having an aperitif at a table today. Each ordered a tiny goblet of port, sipping leisurely and leaving the glasses only two-thirds empty after an hour. There was no treating. To suggest another round would have been an affront to the host. The total cost was 28 cents, including a 4-cent tip. I could not help but notice that at another table during the same period an American tossed off three fiery brandies while perusing the market maneuvers in the Paris Herald.

A wild-eyed chauffeur in a go-devil car came flying around a Champs Elysees corner this morning, almost careening over and stopping dead half way on the sidewalk. I supposed he had lost control, but when a gendarme came up it was explained. In taking his seat he had plopped down on a raincoat buckle, prongs upward. Paris!

A few years ago Ray Long brought me a monocle from London. I vowed that some day I would walk through the Ritz Alley, where monocles are common, wearing it. Tonight in a larkish mood I clapped it in my eye and sallied forth. Save for three steps down when I carried it in my hand I made the entire distance. With such a start, by this time next week I may be running up and down step-ladders fully monocled.

The most expert monocle of the boulevards is Prince Andrew of Greece. I saw him wearing one surf bathing at the Lido once. That's clutching a mean eye glass!
